2. Disorder; riot; tumult; confusion.

Enormous riot and mistrule. Pope.

Lord of misrule, or Master of misrule, the chief of a club or band of revellers. "This lord of misrule in their computations, or drunken meetings, was called 'modiperator.'" Hakevill.

† MIS-RÔ'LY, a. Unruly; turbulent. Bp. Hall.

MISSE, v. a. [A. S. missan; Dut. & Ger. missen; Dan. missé. — L. mitto, missus.] [i. MISSED; pp. MISSING, MISSED.]

1. To fail of hitting or reaching a point aimed at; as, "To miss the mark."

2. To fail of finding, obtaining, or securing the right way; to lose; to forfeit.

Nor can I miss the way, so strongly drawn
By this new-felt attraction. Milton.

So may I, blind Fortune leaving me,
Miss that which one unworthy may attain. Shak.

3. † To do without; to dispense with.

We cannot miss him; he does make our fire,
Fetch in our wood. Shak.

4. To omit; to pass by; to forego; to leave out. "To miss a meal." Whole Duty of Man.

5. To perceive or feel the want or absence of.
What by me thou hast lost thou least shalt miss. Milton.
To miss stays, (Naut.) to fail of going about from one tack to another. Dana.

MISSE, v. n. 1. To fly wide, or fall short; not to hit.

Flying bullets now,
To execute his rage, appear too slow;
They miss, or sweep but common souls away. Waller.

2. To fail; to miscarry; not to succeed.

Men observe when things hit, and not when they miss. Bacon.
3. To make a false step; to mistake; to slip; to fall; to lapse; to trip; to err.

Amongst the angels, a whole legion
Of wicked sprites did fall from happy bliss;
What wonder, then, if one, of women all, did miss? Spenser.

4. To fail to obtain, learn, or find; — with of.
Upon the least reflection, we cannot miss of them. Atterbury.

MISSE, n. 1. Sense of loss, absence, or want.

There will be no great miss of those which are lost. Locke.
2. Mistake; omission; error; failure.

Without any great miss in the hardest points of grammar. Ascham.

3. † Hurt, or harm through accident.

And though one fall through heedless haste,
Yet is his miss not mickle. Spenser.

MISSE, n.; pl. MISSES. [Contracted from mistriss.]

1. A young girl; a term of respectful address to an unmarried female, prefixed to the name; as, "Miss Smith"; "Miss Olivia."

2. An unmarried female kept in concubinage; a kept-mistress; a concubine; a mistress.

In this [the third part of the Siege of Rhodes] acted the fair and famous comedienne called Roxalana, from the part she performed, and I think it was the last, she being taken to be the Earl of Oxford's miss (as at this time they began to call lewd women). John Evelyn, 1662.

3. "Miss, at the beginning of the last century, was appropriated to the daughters of gentlemen under the age of ten. Mistress was then the style of grown-up unmarried ladies, though the mother was living, and, for a considerable part of the century, maintained its ground against the infantine term of miss." Todd. — See MISTRRESS.

With respect to the use of this title, when two or more persons of the same name are spoken of or addressed, there is a good deal of diversity. Some give the plural form to the name; as, "The Miss Smiths"; — others to the title; as, "The Misses Smith." In conversation, the former prevails; in written or printed composition, usage is divided; and in addressing letters, the latter is perhaps the more common. The following authorities are given in favor of the former mode, as used in composition: — "The Miss Cottesells," James Northcott. James Boswell. "The Miss Wilkinsons." Ed. Malone. "The Miss Flamboroughs." Goldsmith. "The Miss Penns." Richard Rush. "The Miss Lees." Dr. Quincey. "The Miss Mores." Hilberforce. "The Miss Porters." Eclectic Review. "The two Miss Smiths." Chambers's Journal. — The following are in favor of the latter form: — "The Misses Mores." Bp. Horne. "The two Misses Porter." Sir Eg. B. P. "The Misses Porter." Charles Lamb. "The Misses Frickel." Southey. "The Misses Gosset." Sir Robert Peel. — Those grammarians who treat of the subject generally favor the former mode, (Miss Smiths;) though some make an exception in addressing letters, — "The Miss Smiths" — much preferable to "The Misses Smith." Grant's Grammar.

The following remarks are quoted from Dr. Crombie's Grammar: "Two or more substantives in concordance, and forming one complex name, or a name and title, have the plural termination annexed to the last only; as, 'The two Miss Louisa Howards,' 'The two Miss Thomsons.' Analogy, Dr. Priestley observes, would plead in favor of another construction, and lead us to say, 'The two Misses Thomson,' 'The two Misses Louisa Howard,' for if the ellipsis were supplied, we should say, 'The two young ladies of the name of Thomson;' and this construction, he adds, he has somewhere met with. The latter form of expression, it is true, occasionally occurs, but general usage, and I am rather inclined to think, analogy likewise, decide in favor of the former; for, with a few exceptions, and these not parallel to the examples now given, we almost uniformly, in complex names, confine the inflection to the last substantive. — We say, indeed, 'The Misses Thomson;' but we seldom or never say, 'The two Misses Thomson,' but 'The two Miss Thomsons.' In accordance with the views of Crombie, T. K. Arnold, in his Grammar, says, "With respect to the Miss Thomsons or the Misses Thomson, I am decidedly for the Miss Thomsons. No one would think of speaking as we are told we ought to write."

Hiley, in his Grammar, says, "In conversation, the plural termination is annexed to the last noun only. But in composition, and in addressing letters to individuals of the same name, we pluralize the title; as, 'To the Misses Howard;' 'To the Misses Thomson.' But both in conversation and in composition we pluralize only the name of married ladies; as, 'Mrs. Watsons were there;' 'To Mrs. Howards.'" — Thus also Dr. Watts: — "May there not be Sir Isaac Newtons in every science? — You must not suppose the world is made up of Lady Auroras and Granvilles."

MIS'SAL, n. [Low L. missale, from missa, mass; It. messale; Sp. misal; Fr. missel.] The Roman Catholic mass-book. Stillingfleet.

MIS-TÄ'EN' (mis-tän'), p. A poetical contraction for mistaken. "This dagger hath mista'en." Shak.

MIS-TÄK'Ä-BLE, a. Liable to be mistaken or misconceived. Brown.

MIS-TÄKE', v. a. [mis and take. — A. S. mistaecan, to instruct amiss, to mistake, to misinform.] [i. MISTOOK; pp. MISTAKING, MISTAKEN.]

1. To take, understand, or conceive wrong; to misapprehend; to misjudge.

This will make the reader very much mistake and misunderstand his meaning. Locke.

To hear this of him, and could wish you were something mistaken in it. Shak.

2. To take one for another.

Fancy passes for knowledge; and what is prettily said is mistaken for solid. Locke.

† Mistaken, or to be mistaken, is often used in a peculiar manner. In one application, it signifies to be in error, or to be wrong; but in another application, it signifies to be misunderstood or misconceived; as, "I am mistaken," "He is mistaken," i. e. wrong in judgment or opinion; — but, "My opinion, or my remark, is mistaken," implies that I am mistaken, or misunderstood, by my hearers. — Richardson says, "To be mistaken has a twofold application: —

"1. I am mistaken, — i. e. taken, apprehended, wrongly, erroneously; I am misapprehended, misunderstood.

"2. I am mistaken, — i. e. taken, led, drawn the wrong course or path, astray; I am misled, misguided, betrayed; and consequently I go wrong or astray, I err, I misapprehend."

MIS-TÄKE', v. n. To err in judgment or opinion; not to judge right; to make a mistake.

Seldom any one mistakes in his names of simple ideas. Locke.

MIS-TÄKE', n. 1. A misconception; an error in opinion; misapprehension; misunderstanding.

Infallibility is an absolute security of the understanding from all possibility of mistake in what it believes. Tilotson.

2. A slip; a blunder; a wrong act done unintentionally.

Thy sword, by a light mistake, glanced upon their throats. Bp. Hall.

† No mistake is a modern slang phrase to express certainty or confidence. The Duke of Wellington, in a letter to Lord Bathurst, dated July 24, 1812, wrote, "There is no mistake; every thing went on as it ought." "I will be there at two o'clock, and no mistake." That is, you may depend upon it. Notes & Queries.

Syn. — See ERROR.

MŌR'-AL, a. [L. moralis; mos, moris, manner, custom; It. morale; Sp. & Fr. moral.]

1. Relating to, or according to, the received and customary rule of right and duty between man and man; relating to, or in accordance with, morality or morals; ethical. Mankind is broken loose from moral bands. Dryden.

2. Relating to the private and social duties of men, as distinct from civil responsibilities; relating to a law of right and wrong, conceived of as obligatory in its own nature, and not depending on human laws; — opposed to positive. Moral duties arise out of the nature of the case itself, prior to external command; "positive" duties do not arise out of the nature of the case, but from external command. Butler.

A "positive" precept concerns a thing that is right because it is commanded; a moral respects a thing commanded because it is right. A Jew was bound to honor his parents, and also to worship at Jerusalem: the former was commanded because it was right, and the latter was right because it was commanded. Whately.

3. Subject to a principle of duty; bound to do what is right; capable of discriminating between right and wrong; accountable.

A moral agent is a being that is capable of those actions that have a moral quality and which can properly be described as good or evil in a moral sense, virtuous or vicious, commendable or blameworthy. Edwards.

4. Voluntary; implying conscience and free will; that admits of a choice between doing or not doing, in view of the supposed right or wrong quality of the deed.

Keep, at least, within the compass of moral actions, which have in them vice or virtue. Hooker.

5. Good, as estimated by a standard of right and wrong; virtuous; just; honest; — the opposite of immoral; as, "A moral life."

6. Supported by the customary course of things; probable; — opposed to demonstrative; as, "Moral certainty"; "Moral evidence."

In reasoning, the word moral is opposed to "demonstrative," and means probable. Fleming.

Political reason is a computing principle — adding, subtracting, multiplying, and dividing morally, as the good, physically or not, is the basis of the moral principle. Shak.

Moral evidence is founded on the principles we have from consciousness and common sense, improved by experience. Dr. Campbell.

7. Relating to mind, and not to matter; not physical; as, "Moral science."

I wonder that thou, being born under Saturn, goest about to apply a moral medicine to a mortifying mischief. Shak.

The moral law, the law of God, prescribing personal and social duties and prohibiting transgressions; the law of the ten commandments, in distinction from the ceremonial law. — Moral faculty, the sense of right and wrong; the moral sense; conscience. — Moral precepts are things commanded because they are right; positive precepts, things right because they are commanded. — Moral philosophy, moral science, the science of human duty, based on a knowledge of human nature, its springs and faculties of action, and of the various relations in which man, as a moral and social being, is, or may be, placed. See ETHICS. — Moral sense, the sense of right and wrong; conscience.

MŌR'-AL, n. 1. The doctrine or practical application of a fable or story; the practical lesson derived from any event, experience, or history; as, "The moral of the French revolution."

The moral is the first business of the poet, as being the groundwork of his instruction, this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral. Dryden.

Mark, silent king, the moral of this sport. Shak.

2. Morality. — See MORALS. [R.] Their moral and economy Most perfectly they made agree. Prior.

MŌR'-AL-ĪST, n. [It. & Sp. moralista; Fr. moraliste.]

1. One who teaches morality or the duties of life; a moral philosopher. Wotton.

2. One who practises morality; — a mere moral, as distinguished from a religious, man. "Another is carnal, and a mere moralist." South.

MO-RĀL'I-TY, n. [L. moralitas; It. moralità; Sp. moralidad; Fr. moralité.]

1. The doctrine of right and wrong; the doctrine or practice of the duties of human life; morals; ethics.

Morality is the rule which teaches us to live soberly and honestly. Ips. Horne.

The system of morality to be gathered out of the writings of ancient sages falls very short of that delivered in the gospel. Swift.

2. The practice of duty; obedience to the moral law; virtue; goodness. Coleridge.

3. The quality of an action as estimated by a standard of right and wrong, and which therefore implies free agency.

The morality of an action is founded in the freedom of that principle by virtue of which it is in the agent's power, having all things ready and requisite to the performance of an action, either to perform or not perform it. South.

4. An old kind of drama or theatrical representation, made by monks, friars, and other ecclesiastics of the middle ages, in which the characters were allegorical personifications of the virtues and vices. Warton.

Syn. — "Moral philosophy, morality, ethics, casuistry, and natural law mean all the same thing, namely, that science which teaches men their duty and the reasons of it." Paley. Of these terms, the least scientific and most popular is morality, which is very commonly used as synonymous with morals, to signify the practice of the duties of life. Manners respect the minor forms of action and intercourse between persons, and have been denominated minor morals. A person by the practice of good morals makes himself a good member of society; by attention to good manners, he renders himself an agreeable companion.

MŌR'-AL-I-ZĀ'T'ION, n. [It. moralizzazione; Fr. moralisation.]

1. The act of moralizing. Sir T. Elyot.

MÖRT-GÄGE (mör'gä), n. [Fr. mortgage; mort, dead, and gage, a pledge.] (Law.)

1. A dead or unproductive pledge, or conveyance of an estate or property to a creditor, for the security of debt, and to become void on payment of it;—called dead, in old English law, because the contract was, that the fruits or rents arising from the thing pledged should not go towards paying off the demand for which it was pledged. Burrill.

According to Littleton, Coke, and others, a mortgage is so called (dead pledge) because, in case of non-payment of the debt at the time limited, the land was for ever dead, and gone from the mortgagor; and in case of payment it became dead as to the mortgagor. Burrill.

2. The state of being pledged.

The land is given in mortgage only, with full intention to be redeemed within one year. Bacon.

MÖRT-GÄGE (mör'gä), v. a. [i. MORTGAGED; pp. MORTGAGING, MORTGAGED.] (Law.) To make over to a creditor as security for the payment of a debt; to pledge or make liable for the payment of a debt at the end of a given time. "His land mortgaged." Bp. Hall.

MÖRT-GÄGE-DEED, n. (Law.) A deed given by way of mortgage. Story.

MÖRT-GÄ-GËE' (mör-gä-jë'), n. A person to whom a mortgage is given. Burrill.

MÖRT-GÄGE-ÖR' (mör-gä-jör', 130), n. (Law.) One who gives a mortgage;—correlative of mortgagor. Blackstone.

The orthography of mortgagor, which is generally used in legal language, is not found at all in the common English dictionaries; and Dr. Webster says it "is an orthography that should have no countenance." Mr. Smart says that the word, when used "with reference to mortgages, is written and pronounced mortgage-or." The insertion of the r, however uncommon it may be, seems necessary, in order to avoid a violation of an invariable principle of English pronunciation, which requires g to be hard when immediately followed by a.

MÖRT-GÄ-GËR (mör'gä-jër) [mör'gä-jër, S. P. J. Ja. K. Sm. R.; mör-gä-jër, W.], n. One who gives a mortgage.—See MORTGAGEOR.

1. The act of mortifying, or the state of being mortified.

2. (Med.) Local death, or loss of vitality of some part of the body; the state of corrupting; gangrene.

The incipient stage of mortification, when the case is still recoverable, is called gangrene; when totally destroyed, sphacelus. Mortification of a bone is called nekrosis. Dunglison.

3. State of being humbled; humiliation; vexation; chagrin; disappointment.

We had the mortification to lose the sight of Munich. Addison.

4. A severe penance observed on a religious account; the act of subduing the passions and appetites by bodily hardships and macerations; self-abasement; self-denial.

The mortification of our lusts has something in it that is troublesome, yet nothing that is unreasonable. Tillotson.

A diet of some fish is more rich and alkaliescent than that of flesh, and therefore very improper for such as practise mortification. Arbuthnot.

5. †(Metallurgy & Chem.) The destruction of active qualities.

Inquire what gives impediement to union or restitution, what is the cause of the quicksilver is mortified with sulphur. Bacon.

Syn.—Mortification is caused by a person's pride or self-importance being hurt; chagrin, by disappointment in a matter in which his feelings are much interested; vexation, by various provocations and troubles. A man feels mortification in failing to obtain an office which he had eagerly sought, chagrin, by the loss of a lawsuit; and vexation by his circumstances being greatly embarrassed.

MÖR-TI-FI-ED, p. a. Humbled; subdued; vexed.

MÖR-TI-FI-ED-NËSS, n. The state of being mortified; humiliation. Bp. Taylor.

MÖR-TI-FY, v. a. [L. mors, death, and facio, to make; It. mortificare; Sp. mortificar; Fr. mortifier.] [i. MORTIFIED; pp. MORTIFYING, MORTIFIED.]

1. (Med.) To destroy the organic texture and vital qualities of; to affect with gangrene. Everlyn.

2. To humble; to depress; to vex; to chagrin.

He is controlled by a nod, mortified by a frown. Addison.
How often is the ambitious man mortified with the very praises he receives! Addison.

3. To macerate or harass, in order to reduce the body to compliance with the mind; to subdue or destroy, as the passions and appetites by severe discipline, as of abstinence or voluntary hardships; to abase; to restrain; to humble.

With fasting mortified, worn out with tears. Harte.
If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die, but if ye, through the spirit, do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. Rom viii. 13.

4. †(Metallurgy & Chem.) To destroy the active powers, or essential qualities of.

He mortified pearls in vinegar. Hakewill.

MÖR-TI-FY, v. n. 1. (Med.) To lose vital heat and activity; to gangrene; to corrupt. Bacon.

2. To be subdued; to die away. Johnson.

3. To practise religious severities.

This makes him give alms of all that he hath, watch, and fast, and mortify. Law.

MŪ, or MŪ (mī or mē) [mī, Ja. E. K. Wb.; mī or mā, S. W. P. F. Sm.], a possessive or an adjective pronoun. Belonging to me.—See MINE.

"There is a puzzling diversity to foreigners in the pronunciation of this word, and sometimes to natives, when they read, which ought to be explained. It is certain that the pronoun my, when it is contradistinguished from any other possessive pronoun, and consequently emphatical, is always pronounced with its full, open sound, rhyming with fy, but when there is no such emphasis, it falls exactly into the sound of me, the oblique case of I. Thus, if I were to say, 'My pen is as bad as my paper,' I should necessarily pronounce my like me, as in this sentence pen and paper are the emphatical words; but if I were to say, 'My pen is worse than yours,' here my is in opposition to yours, and must, as it is emphatical, be pronounced so as to rhyme with high, nigh, &c." Walker.

1. One who interprets mysteries. Warburton.

2. One who shows church relics. Bailey.

MÝS-TA-GO-GÝ, n. [Gr. μυσταγωγία, initiation into mysteries.] The interpretation of mysteries. [R.] Maunder.

† MÝS-TÉ/RI-AL, a. Containing a mystery; mysterious. B. Jonson.

MÝS-TÉ/RI-ÁRSH (-ark), n. [Gr. μυστήριον, mystery, and ἀρχή, a chief.] One who presides over mysteries. Johnson.

MÝS-TÉ/RI-OUS, a. [It. & Sp. misterioso; Fr. mystérieux.] Containing mystery; not made known or understood; unexplained; obscure; unknown; hidden; not revealed; inscrutable.

By a silent, unseen, mysterious process, the fairest flower of the garden springs from a small, insignificant seed; the majestic oak of the forest from an acorn, the strongest and wisest man from a wretched, helpless, and senseless infant; the holy and exalted saint from a miserable sinner. Horne.

MÝS-TÉ/RI-OUS-LÝ, ad. In a mysterious manner; obscurely; enigmatically. Milton.

MÝS-TÉ/RI-OUS-NÉSS, n. The quality of being mysterious; obscurity. Bp. Taylor.

MÝS-TÉ-RÍZE, v. a. To make a mystery of; to treat as a mystery. [L.] Broigne.

MÝS-TÉ-RÝ (mīs'te-rē), n. [Gr. μυστήριον, a mystery or revealed secret; μύω, to initiate; L. mysterium; It. mistero; Sp. misterio; Fr. mystère.]

1. Something secret, unknown, or not revealed; a secret.

Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of heaven. Mark iv. 11.

Those mysteries which heaven
Will not have earth to know. Shak.

The gospel of Christ is a blessing, the spirit of antichrist a curse; both are equally denominated mystery or secret, whilst they remain concealed. Dr. Campbell.

2. Something very obscure, incomprehensible, or above human intelligence; an enigma.

This is a great mystery; but I speak concerning Christ and the church. Eph. v. 32.

Thou hast not ear nor soul to apprehend

The sublime notion and holy mystery

That must be uttered to unfold the age

And serious doctrine of virginity. Milton.

3. The consecrated elements of the eucharist.

In the Communion Office of the Church of England, the elements, after consecration, are called mysteries.

4. A kind of ancient dramatic representation of a religious character; a miracle. Bp. Percy.

5. A trade, art, or occupation. Shak.

Masters frequently bind themselves, in the indentures with their apprentices, to teach them their art, trade, and mystery. Dowdier.

“Mystery, in this sense, is said to be derived from the Fr. mêtier (Old Fr. mestier), a trade; and it is sometimes written mystery.—See MISTERY.

6. pl. Certain religious celebrations among the ancient Greeks and Romans, supposed to have been shows or scenic representations of mythical legends, not unlike the religious mysteries of the middle ages; as the Eleusinian mysteries. Liddell & Scott.

“The word mystery is often understood as something hidden from us, and which we are not to seek to know. It is most important, therefore, to remember that this is the reverse of the Scriptural sense, which is, 1. Something that was kept secret, and is now ‘made manifest.’ ‘The mystery of the gospel’ (Eph. vi. 19), &c.; or, 2. Something of an emblem, whose signification is explained to all disciples. ‘This [marriage] is a great mystery; but I speak [I mean] concerning Christ and his church’ (Eph. v. 32);—marriage, that is, is a mystery not in itself, but when regarded as an emblem of the union of Christ and his church. Many parts, indeed, of the gospel scheme are but very imperfectly revealed; but Paul calls any doctrine a mystery, not so far forth as it is hidden, but, on the contrary, so far as it is revealed.” Eden.

MÝS-TIC, n. One of a class of religious persons who profess to have a direct intercourse with the Spirit of God; one imbued with mysticism.

“They profess a pure and sublime devotion, accompanied with a disinterested love of God, free from all selfish considerations; and they believe that the Scriptures have a mystic and hidden sense which must be sought for, and into which it is necessary that men be initiated in order to understand their true import.—The Mystics are not confined to any particular denomination of Christians, but may be found in almost every form of religious profession.” Eden.

MÝS-TIC, } a. [Gr. μυστικός; L. mysticus; It. MÝS-TI-CAL, } & Sp. místico; Fr. mystique.]

1. Relating to, or containing, mysticism; sacredly obscure; secret.

The mystical sense of Scripture is that which is hidden beneath the literal, thus Jerusalem is literally a city of Jews, but mystically the heavenly Jerusalem, the eternal habitation of the saints. Eden.

2. Involving some secret meaning; emblematical; symbolical.

It is plain, from the Apocalypse, that mystical Babylon is to be consumed by fire. Burnet.

Mystic testament, (Law.) a sealed testament. Burrill.

MÝS-TI-CAL-LÝ, ad. In a mystical manner.

MÝS-TI-CAL-NÉSS, n. Quality of being mystical.

MÝS-TI-CISM, n. [It. & Sp. misticismo; Fr. mysticisme.] The tenets of the Mystics; a view of, or tendency in, religion, which implies a direct communication between man and God through the inward perception of the mind; quietism; enthusiasm.

Mysticism in France contrasts strikingly with mysticism in Germany. The former is a system of sentiment, German. L. A. Vaughan.

“The mystic is one who is conscious of the presence of the feelings of the human soul.” Liberton.

MÝS-TI-FI-CÁ-TION, n. The act of mystifying.

MÝS-TI-FI-CÁ-TOR, n. One who mystifies.

MÝS-TI-FÝ, v. a. [L. MYSTIFIED; pp. MYSTIFYING, MYSTIFIED.] To involve in mystery, to treat in such a way as purposely to perplex.

When the mind is so much involved in the maze of ideas, it becomes bewildered. Locke.

MÝTH, n. [Gr. μῦθος.] A work of fiction; a fabulous story, a fable; an invention; a parable, an allegory. Arnold.

I use this term [myth] as synonymous with invention, having no historical basis. Pococke.

Syn.—“A myth is a narrative framed for the purpose of expressing some general truth, a law of nature, a moral phenomenon, or a religious idea, the different phases of which correspond to the turn of the narrative. An allegory agrees with it in expressing some general idea, but differs from it in this,—that in the allegory the idea was developed before the form, which was invented and adapted to it. The allegory is a reflective and artificial process, the myth springs up spontaneously and by a kind of inspiration. A symbol is a silent myth, which impresses the truths which it conveys, not by successive stages, but at once throws together (σύν βαλλών) significant images of some truth.” Fleming.—See FABLE, PARABLE.

MÝTH-HÍS-TO-RÝ, n. [Gr. μυθιστορία; μῦθος, fable, and ιστορία, history; L. mythistoria.] History interspersed with fable. Maunder.

To call names, to give opprobrious names to.—Christian name, the name given to a person, as by baptism, to distinguish him from others of the same family;—opposed to surname;—also called given or baptismal name.—Common name, a name common to a class or number of persons or things; as, patriot, ocean, empire, city, boy, girl.—Proper name, a name by which a single person or thing is denoted; as, Hancock, Atlantic, Russia, London, Richard, Anne.

Syn.—Name is a generic term for that by which any person or thing is called. Appellation and title are specific names; as, "A title of office or honor;" an appellation denoting something characteristic. An appellative is a common name, as opposed to a proper one. The names of Washington and Franklin; the titles of General and Doctor. A certain man had the name of John [of England], the title of King, and the appellation of Lackland.—Reputation and character imply something more substantial than name. Name and reputation are of a more extended nature than reputation and character. It is less difficult to get a name than to establish a character or reputation. Reputation and credit are acquired within a narrow circle, and may be either good or bad.

NÂME, n. [A. S. niman, nam, to take away.] (Lavo.) The act of distraining;—a thing or chattel distrained. Burrill.

NÂME, v. a. [Goth. nammyan; A. S. nemnan, naman; Dut. noemen; Ger. nennen; Dan. nævne; Sw. nåmna.—Gr. νομάω; L. nomino; It. nominare; Sp. nominar; Fr. nommer.] [i. NAMED; pp. NAMING, NAMED.]

1. To discriminate by giving a particular appellation; to set or give a name to; to entitle; to title; to denominate; to style; to term.

Death, a necessary end, Shak.

2. That cannot be omitted, and the end attained: indispensable; requisite; essential.

A certain kind of temper is necessary to the pleasure and quietude of the mind; and it is necessary to our happiness, and that of the world, that we should be temperate. Tillotson.

3. Acting from necessity or compulsion; — opposed to free; as, "Some philosophers suppose man to be a necessary agent."

4. Decisive by inevitable consequence; conclusive. "By any necessary inference." White.

Syn. — Necessary is a term of extensive application. Things may be necessary in the course of nature; as it is necessary for all men once to die, death being necessary, inevitable, or unavoidable. Food is necessary or essential for the support of life; it is necessary or requisite to obey the laws, or to do one's duty. In a matter of doubt or difficulty, it may be expedient to seek for wise counsel. One may manage to do without what is needful, but what is necessary is indispensable, and cannot be dispensed with or omitted.

NĒC'ĒS-SA-RY, n.; pl. NECESSARIES.

1. Something necessary or indispensable; — commonly used in the plural.

2. A necessary house; a privy. Swinburne.

Syn. — See NECESSARIES.

1. Irresistible force; compulsion; fatality.

Approach not me; and what I will is fate. Milton.

2. State of being necessary; indispensableness; indispensability.

We see the necessity of an augmentation to bring the enemy to reason. Addison.

3. Inevitable consequence.

Good nature, or beneficence and candor, is the product of right reason, which of necessity will give allowance to the failings of others. Dryden.

4. Pressing want or need; urgency.

We are first to consult our own necessities; but then the necessities of our neighbors have a Christian right to a part of what we have to spare. L'Estrange.

5. Something necessary or indispensable; — commonly used in the plural.

Things are necessary for necessities, Shak.

Syn. — "Logical necessity is that which, according to the terms of the proposition, cannot but be. Thus it is necessary that man be a rational animal, because these are the terms in which he is defined. — Moral necessity is that without which the effect cannot well be, although, absolutely speaking, it may. A man who is lame is under a moral necessity to use some help, but absolutely he may not. — Physical necessity is when a thing is necessary according to physical causes. — Metaphysical necessity is when the contrary cannot be conceded, as that a whole is greater than a part." Fleming.

Syn. — Necessity is more pressing than need. Necessity forces us to act for ourselves; in our need we require the assistance of others. A time of need; a case of necessity. "A friend in need is a friend indeed." "Necessity has no law." The necessities of our nature; the necessities of life. Habit and desire create necessities; but nature requires only necessities. — See DESTINY, OCCASION.

1. The state of requiring relief or supply; occasion or necessity for something; want; necessity. "Immediate are my needs." Shak.

What further need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec? Heb. vii. 11.

2. Want of the necessities of life; indigence; poverty; penury; destitution; privation.

*Need and oppression stareth in thy eyes,
Upon thy back hangs ragged misery.* Shak.

Syn. — See NECESSITY, OCCASION.

NĒED, v. a. [i. NEEDED; pp. NEEDING, NEEDED.] To want; to lack; to require.

They that be whole need not a physician. Matt. ix. 12.
Allow not nature more than nature needs. Shak.

“The word need (though, as a principal verb transitive, it is unquestionably both regular and complete, having all the requisite parts, need, needed, needing, needed, and being necessarily inflected in the indicative present, as, I need, thou needest, he needs or needeth) is so frequently used without inflection, when placed before another verb to express a necessity of the being, action, or passion, that one may well question whether it has not become, under these circumstances, an auxiliary of the potential mood, and therefore proper to be used, like all the other auxiliaries of this mood, without change of termination; as, ‘He need not go.’” Goold Brown.

Grammarians are not agreed with respect to the use of need or needs in such cases. Arnold says, “The verb need is used without the s in the third person singular; as, ‘He need not be afraid.’” Dr. Campbell says, “For the sake of analogy, ‘he needs, he dares,’ are preferable to ‘he need, he dare.’”

Syn. — See LACK.

NĒED, v. n. To be wanted; to be necessary. “We have done . . . all that needs.” Locke.

1. Denial; declaration that something is not, or has not been, or shall not be; disavowal; — opposed to affirmation or assertion. Rogers.

2. (Logic.) The absence of a quality in a thing which, by nature, cannot have it; or the denial of a thing by denying its possession of some quality which, by nature, it has not.

“A negation is the absence of that which does not naturally belong to the thing we are speaking of, or which has no right, obligation, or necessity to be present with it; as when we say, ‘A stone is inanimate,’ that is, it has no life.” Watts.

NĒGÄ’TIVE, a. [L. negativus; nego, negatus, to deny; It. & Sp. negativo; Fr. negatif.]

1. Denying; that denies or expresses negation; withholding or restraining, by refusing assent; — opposed to affirmative, as, “A negative answer”; “Negative votes.”

It is understood to be the rule [in the House of Commons] that a member may speak even after the question is put, if the affirmative voice only has been given, and the negative not yet given. Brace.

2. (Logic.) Noting a proposition in which the predicate is denied of the subject. Whately.

3. Implying only the absence of something; privative; — opposed to positive.

There is another way of denying Christ . . . which is negating, when we do not acknowledge and confess him. South.

Negative sign, (Algebra.) the sign of subtraction [—]; — also called minus. — Negative quantity, (Algebra.) a quantity preceded by the negative sign. — Negative electricity, in the theory of Dr. Franklin, the electricity of a body which has imparted some of the electricity it naturally possesses to another body, which is thereby rendered positive; — same as resinous electricity in the theory of Du Fay.

“When glass is rubbed with silk, the equilibrium of the electric fluid is disturbed, the silk imparts it to the glass, and hence the former, losing electricity, becomes minus, or negative, and the latter, acquiring electricity, becomes plus, or positive. Brande.

NĒGÄ’TIVE, n. 1. A proposition by which something is denied; a negative proposition.

Of negatives we have the least certainty, they are usually hardest, and many times impossible, to be proved. Tillotson.

2. A word that expresses negation; a particle of denial; as, not, no, nay.

3. That side of a question which denies or refuses; — opposed to affirmative; as, “A majority voted in the negative.”

4. The power of preventing enactment, by refusing assent or concurrence; as, “Each branch of the legislature has a negative on the proceedings of the other.”

Negative pregnant, a negative which implies an affirmative.

“The duplication of the negative did not always, in our earlier writers, destroy its force, but rather strengthened it . . . It was the genuine language of the time.” Nares.

There is no harm intended to your person,
Nor to no Roman else. Shak.

By no means be not seen. Beau. & Fl.

NĒGÄ’TIVE, v. a. [i. NEGATIVED; pp. NEGATIVING, NEGATIVED.]

He answered negatively. Boyle.

2. In form of speech, implying the absence of something; — opposed to positively.

I shall show what this image of God in man is, negatively by showing wherein it does not consist, and positively by showing wherein it does. South.

3. With negative electricity; as, “A body negatively electrified.”

NĒGÄ’TIV’-TY, n. The state or the quality of being negative; negation. Ec. Rev.

†NĒGÄ’TQ-RY, a. Negative. Cotgrave.

NEG-LĒCT’, v. a. [L. negligo, neglectus; neg, not, and lego, to pick up, to gather, to choose; It. negligere; Fr. negliger.] [i. NEGLECTED; pp. NEGLECTING, NEGLECTED.]

1. To omit by carelessness or design; not to do, perform, improve, promote, or attend to as one ought; to leave out.

In heaven,
Where honor due and reverence none neglects. Milton.

2. Not to care for or heed as one ought; not to treat with due respect; to disregard; to slight; as, “He neglected the precepts of his parents.”

3. †To cause to be delayed or deferred.

I trust

My absence doth neglect no great design,
Which by my presence might have been concluded. Shak.

Syn. — A person neglects that which should be attended to. An opportunity, means of improvement, and business are neglected; a word, sentence, or date is omitted; an acquaintance or friend may be slighted; wise counsel is too often disregarded. — See DISREGARD.

NEG-LĒCT’, n. 1. Culpable omission, as from carelessness or inattention; forbearance or failure to do or attend to something which ought to be done or attended to.

My master charged me to deliver a ring to Madam Silvia; which, out of my neglect, was never done. Shak.

2. Omission or lack of due respect or attention; slight.

I have perceived a most faint neglect of late, which I have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness. Shak.

3. Negligence; habit of omitting, as from carelessness or inattention. “Age breeds neglect to all.” Denham.

4. The state of being neglected or disregarded.

The duke hath put on a religious life,
And thrown into neglect the pompous court. Shak.

Syn. — See DISREGARD, NEGLIGENT, NEGLIGENCE.

NEŪ-ĒR, ad. [A. S. nefre; ne, not, and æfre, ever.]

1. Not ever; not at any time; at no time.

"Never man spake like this man." John vii. 46.

He that cometh to me shall never hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst. John vi. 33.

2. The phrase never a, formerly used, is nearly equivalent to no, or not any; but in this, never retains its literal meaning of not ever. "There was never a plain text." Atterbury. "There was never a son left him, save Jehoahaz." 2 Chron. xxi. 17.

3. In no degree; not at all.

Whoever has a friend to guide him may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse. South.

3. Johnson says [1755], never "is used in a form of speech handed down by the best writers, but lately accused, I think, with justice, of solecism; as, 'He is mistaken, though never so wise.' It is now maintained that propriety requires it to be expressed thus: 'He is mistaken, though ever so wise;' that is, 'He is mistaken, how wise sooner he may be.'" — Smart says [1817], "Charm he never so wisely, i. e. 'Charm he not [merely wisely, but] ever so wisely.' — a genuine English mode of expression, though the squeamishness of grammarians has rendered it obsolete."

It is much used in composition; as, never-fading, never-dying, &c.

† NEŪ-ĒR-THE-LĀT-ĒR, ad. Nevertheless. Chaucer.

NEŪ-ĒR-THE-LESS', ad. & conj. [never the less.] Not ever the less; not at all the less; not the less; notwithstanding; however.

Samuel came no more to see Saul until the day of his death; nevertheless Samuel mourned for Saul. 1 Sam. xv. 35. There will always be something that we shall wish to have finished, and be nevertheless unwilling to begin. Johnson.

Syn. — See BUT, HOWEVER.

NEŪ (nū), a. [Goth. nūja; A. S. nīwe, nīowe, neove, nīwo; Dut. nīwe; Old Ger. nīwe, nīwe, nūce; Ger. neu; Dan., Icel., & Sw. ny.

— Gr. νέος, originally νέφος; L. novus; It. nuovo; Sp. nuevo; Fr. neuf. — Sansc. & Hind. nava; Per. navi.

1. Lately done, made, produced, effected, or come into being; that has existed only a short time; of recent origin; fresh; novel; — opposed to old; as, "A new garment"; "A new book."

2. That existed before, but was not before known; recently discovered; as, "A new metal."

The commencement of the present century was rendered memorable in the annals of astronomy by the discovery of four new planets between Mars and Jupiter. Obituary.

NEŪ-RĒD-SĀND'STONE, n. (Geol.) The sandstone immediately above coal-measures. Brande.

NEŪS' (nūs), n. sing. & pl.; commonly singular. [From new, as goods from good, odds from odd.] Recent account; fresh information, particularly from a distance; tidings; intelligence.

Grammarians differ somewhat with respect to the number of news; yet "the word is now," as stated by Murray, "almost universally considered as belonging to the singular number." And (Crombie says, "It is sometimes construed as a singular, and sometimes as a plural noun; the former is far the more general." "Evil news rules fast, while good news bays." Milton. "This is all the news talked of." Pope.

The word news has been fancifully derived from the initial letters of the words denoting the four cardinal points, North, East, West, and South; as in the following epigram, in "Wit's Recreations," first published in 1640: —

When new doth come, if any would discuss
The letter of the word, resolve it thus
News is conveyed by letter, word, or month,
And comes from North, East, West, or South.

Syn. — News and tidings are often used indiscriminately. Tidings are expected, and may allay anxiety; news, unexpected, and gratify curiosity. In time of war, the public are eager for news; and persons who have relatives in the army are anxious to have tidings from them.

NEŪS'BÖY, n. A boy who vends newspapers.

To make nice, to be scrupulous.

He that stands upon a slippery place, Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up. Shak.

Nice is a word much used, especially in conversation, often without any well-defined meaning. The following remarks, from Archdeacon Hare, are quoted from the “Philological Museum”:—

“That stupid vulgarity by which we use the word nice to denote almost every mode of approbation, for almost every variety of quality, and from sheer poverty of thought, or fear of saying any thing definite, wrap up every thing indiscriminately in this characterless domino,—speaking at the same breath of a nice cheese-cake, a nice tragedy, a nice oyster, a nice child, a nice man, a nice tree, a nice sermon, a nice day, a nice country,—as if a universal deluge of nice (for nice seems originally to have been only nais) had whelmed the whole island. This vulgarity has already taken even in the lowest classes, and one hears ploughboys talking of nice weather, and sailors of a nice sea.”

Syn.—See FINICAL.

NÍCE'LY, ad. 1. In a nice manner; scrupulously; minutely; accurately; exactly; delicately.

2. A watch or guard at night. Smart.

NIGHT'-WATCH-ER (nīt'wäch-er), n. One who watches in the night. Hulot.

NĪG-RĪ-TÜDE, n. Blackness. Dr. Whedon.

NĪ'HĪL DĒ'BET, or NĪL DĒ'BET. [L. He owes nothing.] (Law.) The general issue in debt or simple contract. Bouvier.

NĪ'HĪL DĪ'CIT, or NĪL DĪ'CIT. [L. He says nothing.] (Law.) The failure of the defendant to put in a plea or answer to the plaintiff's declaration by the day assigned. Bouvier.

NĪ'HĪL HÄ'BET, or NĪL HÄ'BET. [L. He has nothing.] (Law.) The name of a return made by a sheriff to a scire-facias or other writ, when he has not been able to serve it on the defendant. Bouvier.

NĪ'HĪL-ISM, n. 1. Nothingness; nihilism. Dwight.
 2. Scepticism carried to the denial of all existence. Fleming.

Nothing but utter scepticism and nihilism ensues. Qu. Rev.

NĪ-HĪL-IS'TIC, a. Relating to nihilism or to the doctrine of nihilism. Ch. Examiner.

NĪ-HĪL'-TŸ, n. [Fr. nihilité; L. nihilum, nihil, nothing; ne, not, and hilum, a little thing.] Nothingness; the state of being nothing.

Not being is considered as excluding all substance, and then all modes are necessarily excluded; and thus we call pure nihilism, or mere nothing. Watts.

NĪL, n. [L. nothing.] (Com.) A term commonly used in book-keeping to denote an entry that is cancelled. Simmonds.

† NĪLL, v. a. [A. S. nyllan, nillan; ne, not, and willan, to will.] Not to will; to refuse or reject. "I will thine offered grace." Spenser.

† NĪLL, v. n. To be unwilling. Shak.

And, will you, nill you, I will marry you.

NĪLL, n. Shining sparks that come off brass when melted in a furnace. Bailey.

NĪ-LÖM'E-TER, n. [Gr. νελομέτριον; Néilos, the Nile, and μέτρον, a measure.] A graduated rod or column for measuring the rise and fall of water in the Nile; a niloscope. Gent. Mag.

NĪ'LO-SCÖPE, n. [Gr. νελοσκοπεῖον; Néilos, the Nile, and σκοπέω, to behold.] Nilometer. Ogilvie.

NĪ-LÖT'IC, a. Pertaining to the Nile. Clarke.

† NĪM, v. a. [Goth. & A. S. niman; Dut. neemen; Old Ger. nimen, nemen; Ger. nehmen.] To take; to steal; to pilfer; to filch. Hudibras.

Æt. Hence Shakespeare calls one of his rogues Nym. "Nares — "It is still a common word among thieves." C. Richardson.

NĪM-BĪF'ER-OÜS, a. [L. nimifer, nimbus and fero.] Bringing storms or clouds. Ash.

NĪM'BLE, a. [Junius suggests A. S. numol, capable, able to take; Johnson and Richardson refer to nim, to take.] Light and quick in motion or action; moving with ease and celerity; agile; brisk; lively; expert; active.

You nimble light-footed dart your blinding flames
Into his scornful eyes. Shak.
Through the mid seas the nimble pinnace sails. Pope.
Syn.—See ACTIVE.

NIM'BLE-FOOT-ED (nīm'bl-fūt-əd), a. Light or swift of foot. Shak.

NIM'BLE-NESS, n. The quality of being nimble; agility; celerity; swiftness. Sidney.

NIM'BLE-PIN'IONED, a. Swift in flight. Shak.

† NIM'BLESS, n. Nimbleness. Spenser.

NIM'BLE-WIT'ED, a. Ready or quick with an answer or question; quick-witted. "A certain nimble-witted counsellor at the bar." Bacon.

1. (Meteor.) A term applied to a cloud that is discharging something, as rain, snow, or hail. Cleveland.

2. (Paint. & Sculp.) A halo or circular disk round the heads of sacred personages. Fairholt.

"The nimbus [is] peculiar to the head, the aureole to the body; and the term glory is extended to the former and the latter united." Fairholt.

NIN'COM-PÖÖP, n. [Corrupted from L. non compos [mentis], not sound [of mind].] Johnson. A fool; a blockhead; a dolt. [Vulgar.] Addison.

NINE, a. [Goth. nīun; A. S. nigon, nigen; Dut. negen; Ger. neun; Dan. ni; Sw. nio; Icel. nín.—Gr. ennea; L. novem; It. nove; Sp. neuve; Fr. neuf.—Hind. nau; Pers. nūh.] One more than eight or one less than ten.

The Nine Worthies, famous personages often alluded to in old writers. They have been counted up in the following manner: Three Gentiles,—1. Hector, the son of Priam; 2. Alexander the Great; 3. Julius Cæsar. Three Jews,—1. Joshua, conqueror of Canaan; 2. David, king of Israel; 3. Judas Maccabeus. Three Christians,—1. Arthur, king of Britain; 2. Charlemagne; 3. Godfrey of Bouillon. Nares.

NINE, n. 1. The number composed of eight and one; three times three.

2. A symbol representing eight and one; as 9.

3. The nine Muses. Campbell.

NINE-FOLD, a. & n. Nine times repeated. Milton.

NINE-HÖLES, n. pl. A game in which nine holes are made in the ground in the angles and sides of a square, for the purpose of bowling a pellet into them according to certain rules. Drayton.

NINE-KILL-ER, n. (Ornith.) The popular name of the northern butcher-bird. De Kay.

NINE-MEN'S-MÖR'RIS, n. A game played with nine holes in the ground.—See MORRIS. Todd.

NINE-PENCE, n.; pl. NINE-PEN-CES. A silver coin no longer current, of the value of nine pence. Gay. Smart.

NINE-PINS, n. pl. A game which consists in rolling a bowl at nine pins or pieces of wood set on end; skittles. Peacham.

In the United States, the game is usually played with ten pins, and is often called tenpins.

NINE-SCÖRE, a. & n. Nine times twenty, or one hundred and eighty. Addison.

NINE-TÖEN, a. Nine and ten.

NINE-TÖEN, n. The sum of nine and ten;—the symbol representing nine and ten; as 19.

NINE-TÖENTH, a. Next after the eighteenth;—the ordinal of nineteen:—noting one of nineteen equal parts into which a thing is divided.

NINE-TY-ETH, a. Next after the eighty-ninth; the ordinal of ninety:—noting one of ninety equal parts into which a thing is divided.

NINE-TY, a. & n. Nine times ten:—the symbol representing nine times ten; as 90.

NINE-WÖRTHI-NESS (-wüi'-), n. Having worth equal to that of the celebrated nine worthies.—See NINE. Hudibras.

NIN'NY, n. [Sp. niño.] Johnson. Richardson.—Gr. νῆψ, foolish. Junius. A fool; a simpleton; a blockhead; a noodle. [Vulgar.] Shak.

NIN'NY-HÄM-MER, n. A fool; a simpleton; a dunce; a dolt; a ninny. [Vulgar.] Arbutnot.

NIN'SIN, n. A bitter root possessing medicinal properties resembling those of ginseng, being the root of Sium nusi. Dunghson.

NINTH, n. Next after the eighth;—the ordinal of nine:—noting one of nine equal parts into which a thing is divided.

NINTH, n. (Mus.) A dissonant interval containing an octave and a tone or a semitone:—the chord consisting of the common chord with the eighth raised one note. Moore.

NINTH'LY, ad. In the ninth place. Sherwood.

NIP, v. a. [Dut. knippen; Ger. kneipen; Dan. knibe; Sw. nypa.] [i. NIPPED; pp. NIPPING, NIPPED.]

1. To pinch, bite, or cut, as with nails, teeth, pincers, &c. Bacon.

2. To bite as frost; to blast; to destroy.

The first-born bloom of spring
Nipped with the freezing teeth of winter's frost. Milton.

3. To satirize; to taunt sarcastically.

Soothing such as be present, nipping any that is absent. Ascham.

To nip in the bud, to destroy or kill in infancy or the first stage. "It is easy to guess to what perfection I might have brought this work, had it not been nipped in the bud." Arbutnot.

NIP, n. 1. A pinch, as with the nails, teeth, pincers, &c.; a bite. Ascham.

2. A small cut; a cutting off. Shak.

3. A blast; a blight. Stepney.

4. A dram; a nipper. [Local.] Wright.

5. (Naut.) A short turn in a rope. Dana.

6. † A satirical hit; a taunt. W. Lily.

7. † A thief; a cutpurse; a nipper. Decker.

NIP'PER, n. 1. He who, or that which, nips.

2. One of the fore teeth of a horse. Youatt.

3. A cutpurse; a pickpocket. Decker.

4. A dram; a nip. [Local and vulgar.]

NIP'PER-ING, n. (Naut.) The act of fastening two parts of a rope together in order to prevent it from rendering. Ogilvie.

NIP'PER-KIN, n. A little cup; a tankard. [r.] Lye.

NIP'PERS, n. pl. 1. Small pincers; tweezers;—instruments for cutting up loaf sugar. Simmonds.

2. (Naut.) A number of yarns marled together, used for fastening the messenger to the cable. Dana.

NIP'PING, p. a. That nips; pinching; biting.

NIP'PING-LY, ad. Bitingly; sarcastically. Johnson.

† NIP-PI-TÄ-TÖ, n. Strong liquor. Beau. & Fl.

NIP'PLE (nīp'pl), n. [A. S. nypele.]

1. A conical protuberance on the breast of a female, by which milk is drawn by the sucking young; the teat; the dug; the pap. Shak.

2. The orifice at which any animal liquor is separated. Derham.

3. Any thing that projects in the form of a nipple, as that part of a percussion lock on which the cap is placed. Ogilvie.

NIP'PLE-SHIELD, n. A protection for the breast, worn by females. Simmonds.

NIP'PLE-WÖRT (nīp'pl-würt), n. An herb formerly used for sore nipples; Lapsana communis.

NIP'TER, n. [Gr. νίπτο, to wash.] (Ecll.) The ceremony of washing the feet, observed by members of the Greek Church on Good Friday. Hook.

† NIS. [A. S. ne, not, and is, is.] Is not. Spenser.

NIS'AN (nī'san, K. Sm. Wr.; nī'san, Wb.), [n. Heb. נִסָּן.] The name given, after the captivity, to the first month of the Hebrew civil year, originally called Abib. It began with the new moon of April, or, according to the Rabbins, of March. Kitt.

NIS' PRI'US, n. [L., unless before.] (Law.) A phrase denoting the system of trial of issues of fact, in civil cases, before a jury, as distinguished from the argument of issues and questions of law before the court in bench. Burill.

The original of which name is this: all causes commenced in the courts of Westminster-Hall, are, by the course of the courts, appointed to be tried on a day fixed in some Easter or Michaelmas Term, by a jury returned from the county wherein the cause of action arises: but with this proviso, "Nisi Prius" justitiam ad assisas capiendas venerint; that is, "unless before" the day prefixed, the judges of assize come into the court in question, which they always do in the vacation between each Easter and Michaelmas Term, and then, on the return of the verdict given by the jury to the court above, the judges there give judgment for the party for whom the verdict is found. Whishaw.

NIT, n. [A. S. hnitu; Dut. neet; Ger. niss; Dan. gnid; Sw. gnät.] The egg of a louse or other small insect. Derham.

2. [L. niteo, nitens, to shine.] Brightness; lustre. [r.] Johnson.

NIT'ID (nī'tid, S. W. J. F. Ja. Sm.; nī'tid, P. K.), a. [L. nitidus; niteo, to shine; It. & Sp. nitido.] 1. Shining; bright; lustrous. "A clean and nitid color." [r.] Boyle.

2. Gay; spruce;—used of persons. [r.] Herce.

NITRATE, n. (Chem.) A salt formed by the union of nitric acid with a base; as, "Nitrate of silver." Silliman.

NITRÄT-ED, a. Combined with nitre or nitric acid. Smart.

NITRA-TINE, n. (Chem.) A nitrate of soda found in crystals in Peru. Simmonds.

NITRE (nī'ter), n. [Gr. νίτρον, native soda, natron; L. nitrum; It. & Sp. nitro, nitre; Fr. nitre.] A colorless, crystalline, anhydrous salt, of a cooling, slightly bitter taste, unalterable in the air, and insoluble in alcohol;—used in the manufacture of gunpowder, in the production of nitric acid, in medicine, as a manure, and for preserving meat, &c.; saltpetre; nitrate of potassa.

Nitre is generated spontaneously in the soil, by the gradual decomposition of animal matters, and crystallizes on its surface, in several parts of the world, especially in India, whence is derived nearly the whole of this salt used in Great Britain. In the United States it is obtained by decomposing the carbonate of potassa contained in wood-ashes, the nitrate of lime, found abundantly in caverns in some of the Western States. It is sometimes made artificially, especially in Germany and France, by halving with fermenting urine a mixture of animal matter and calcareous soil. Nitre crystallizes from the juices of certain plants, and commonly exists, in small quantity, in rain-water. Brande. Silliman. Johnston.

Cubic nitre, nitrate of soda;—so called because it crystallizes in rhombs. Brande.—Sweet spirits of nitre, hyponitrous ether mixed with alcohol;—much used in medicine. Johnston.

NITRIC, a. (Chem.) Pertaining to, or containing, nitre.

Nitric acid, an intensely acid and corrosive liquid, when pure, colorless, but commonly of a reddish color, consisting of one equivalent of nitrogen and five equivalents of oxygen, obtained by heating nitrate of potassa (nitre), or nitrate of soda, with strong sulphuric acid. It is powerful solvent of the metals, and decomposes all vegetable substances. It is popularly called aqua-fortis.—Nitric oxide, a colorless, tasteless, inodorous gas, consisting of one equivalent of nitrogen and two of oxygen, obtained by adding nitric acid to metallic copper, deutoxide or binoxide of nitrogen;—also called nitrous gas, and nitrous air. Silliman. Brande.

NITRI-FI-CÄ'TION, n. The process of converting into nitre. Furn. Ency.

NITRI-FY, v. a. To convert into nitre. Ure.

NITRITE, n. A salt formed by the union of nitrous acid with a base. Brande.

NITRO-Ä-ER-AL, a. [Gr. νίτρον, natron, and αἰρ, air.] Containing, or impregnated with, nitre and air. Ray.

NITRO-BENZIDE, n. (Chem.) A liquid of a light yellow color, and very sweet taste, obtained by adding benzine to concentrated, hot, nitric acid. P. Cyc.

NĪ'TRQ-ĜĒN, n. [Gr. νίτρον, natron, and γεννᾶν, to produce.] (Chem.) A colorless, tasteless, inodorous, and unflammable gas, which constitutes four fifths of our atmosphere, with the oxygen in which it is not chemically combined, but merely mechanically mingled; azote.

NĪ'TRQ-ĜĒ'NĒ-OŪS, a. Relating to nitrogen:—producing nitre. Smart.

NĪ'TRQ-ĜĒN-IZE, v. a. To impregnate with nitrogen; to azotize. Hoblyn.

NĪ'TRQ-GLŶC'E-RĪNE, n. A powerful explosive compound, being a yellow oily liquid prepared by the action of strong nitric acid on glycerine.

NĪ'TRQ-LEŪ'CATE, n. (Chem.) A salt formed by the union of nitroleucic acid with a base.

NĪ'TRQ-LEŪ'CIC, a. [nitrogen and leucine.] (Chem.) Noting an acid formed by heating leucine with nitric acid. Wright.

NĪ'TRQ-MĒ-TER, n. [Gr. νίτρον, natron, and μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument for ascertaining the quality or value of nitre. Ure.

NĪ'TRQ-MŪ-RI-ĀT'IC, a. (Chem.) Noting an acid composed of nitric acid and muriatic (hydrochloric) acid, used as a solvent for gold and platinum;—also called aqua regia. Silliman.

Aqua regia does not, strictly speaking, oxidize gold and platinum; it causes merely their combination with chlorine. Ure.

NĪ'TRQ-NĀPH'THA-LĀSE, n. (Chem.) A yellow crystalline substance obtained by boiling naphthaline in nitric acid, and consisting of carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, and nitrogen. P. Cyc.

NĪ'TRQ-NĀPH'THA-LĒSE, n. (Chem.) A substance obtained by boiling nitronaphthalase in nitric acid. P. Cyc.

NĪ'TRQSE, a. Pertaining to nitre; nitrous; nitry. Mead.

† NĪ'TRQSE, n. The quality of nitre. Cotgrave.

NĪ'TRQ-SUL-PHŪ'RE-OŪS, a. Containing nitre and sulphur. Ray.

NĪ'TROUS, a. Pertaining to, partaking of, or resembling nitre; nitry; nitrosee.

Nitrous acid, a thin, anhydrous liquid, of a strong, disagreeable odor, and pungent, acid taste, consisting of one equivalent of nitrogen and four equivalents of oxygen. It is a very powerful oxidizing agent. P. Cyc.—Nitrous oxide, a colorless gas, of a sweetish taste, and rather agreeable odor, obtained by heating crystallized nitrate of ammonia; protoxide of nitrogen. When respired, it produces, in most persons, an exhilarating effect somewhat similar to intoxication;—whence it is sometimes called laughing or intoxicating gas. Ure. Brande.

NĪTS-CHĀN'DI, n. [Turk.] A secretary of state in Turkey. Smart.

NĪ'TER, n. (Ent.) The horse-bee, that deposits nits on horses. Wright.

NĪT'TI-LŶ, ad. Lousily; with nits. Hayward.

NĪT'TY, a. 1. [From nĭt.] Abounding with nits, or the eggs of lice. B. Jonson.

2. † [L. nitidus.] Splendid; gay. Marston.

NĪV'E-OŪS [nĭv'e-ŭs, W. P. J. F. Ja. Sm. Wr.; nĭv'yus, K.], a. [L. niveus; nĭx, nĭvis, snow; It. & Sp. nevoso.] Snowy; resembling snow; nival. [R.] "A pure and niveous white." Browne.

NĪ'VETTE, n. [Fr.] A kind of peach. Simmonds.

NĪX, n. A kind of fairy. W. Scott.

NĪ-ZĀM, n. The title of the native sovereign of Hyderabad, in India, derived from Nizam-ul-Mulk, who, after the death of Aurungzebe, obtained possession of the Mahometan conquests in the Deccan, his name being assumed as a title by his successors in the sovereignty. P. Cyc.

NŌ, ad. [Goth. ne, nĭ; A. S. na, no, not; Old

Ger. ni, ne; whence Dut. neen; nĭ and een, one; Ger. nein; nĭ and ein, one; Dan. nei.—Gr. νῆ, inseparable negative or privative prefix; L. ne, a dialectic variety of Gr. νῆ; L. non; ne, not, and unum, one; It. & Sp. no; Fr. non; Sansc. & Per. na. "No and not have the same extraction. The Dan. n dig, Sw. n dig, and Dut. noodle, nude, and no, mean, averse, unwilling." Tooke.

1. The word of negation, denial, or refusal;—opposed to yea or yes; as, "Is he sick? No."

2. Not in any degree; not at all; not; as, "He is no richer than my friend."

No is often used for not, in denying propositions, and opposed to concession or affirmation,—particularly, but somewhat pleonastically, in indirect questions. "Whether a war for the propagation of the Christian faith . . . be lawful or no." Bacon.—It is also used both before and after another negative, and between two negatives, in either case strengthening the negation.

No, not the how which so adorns the skies
So do thou, or boasts so many dyes. Waller.

And no man could bind him, no, not with chains. Mark v. 2.

"This is one of the words which grammarians are puzzled to class properly. 'When a grammarian knows not what to make of a word,' says Horne Tooke, 'he calls it an adverb.' No stands, in many of its uses, as a whole sentence; and so is neither one part of speech nor another, but is a sentence expressed by one word." Smart.

NŌ, a. Not any; none.

No wit to flatter left of all his store,
No fool to laugh at, which he valued more. Pope.

"It is an adjective in such phrases as no more, no where, by considering the other word to be a substantive; but the usual mode is to consider both words as an adverbial phrase." Smart.

NŌ, n. 1. A denial; the word of denial.

Discourse may want an animated no,
To brush the surface, and to make it flow. Cowper.

2. A vote, or one who votes in the negative; as, "The noes have it." Hastel.

NŌ-ĀCH'T-AN, a. Relating to the patriarch Noah, or to his time. Coleridge.

NŌB, n. [See KNOB.] 1. The head. [Low.] Todd.

2. One who during a strike holds out for higher wages. De Quincey.

† NŌ-BĪL'I-FŶ, v. a. [L. nobilis, noble, and facio, to make.] To make noble; to ennoble. Holland.

† NŌ-BĪL'I-TĀTE, v. a. To make noble; to ennoble; to dignify; to exalt. Bullockar.

NŌ-BĪL'I-TY, n. [L. nobilitas; nobilis, noble; It. nobilità; Sp. nobleza; Fr. noblesse.]

1. The state of being of noble rank; the state of enjoying rank above the gentry and common people, whether by antiquity of family, or by letters-patent conferred by the sovereign. Shak.

2. Nobleness; moral excellence; loftiness of character; greatness; grandeur; dignity.

True nobility is exempt from fear. Shak.

Thy nobility is not a virtue, yet the nobility of her course
Is proved to be. Sidney.

"This general sense is not disused, but is not common." Smart.

2. An opening or pass through a range of mountains; as, "The Notch of the White Mountains." [U. S.] J. Farmer.

NÖTCH, v. a. [3. NOTCHED; pp. NOTCHING, NOTCHED.] To cut a hollow into; to cut in small hollows. "Who notches sticks." Pope.

The middle claw of the heron and cormorant is toothed and notched like a saw. Paley.

NÖTCH'BÖRD, n. (Arch.) The board which receives the ends of the steps in a staircase. Brande.

NÖTCH'ING, n. 1. The act of making a notch.

2. A notch, as in timber: — an incision.

† NÖT'E, [Contracted from ne note.] Know not, or could not. Chaucer. Spenser.

NÖTE, n. [L. nota; nosco, notus, to know; It. & Sp. nota; Fr. & Ger. note.]

1. That by which something is known, or which is marked or observed; a mark or token.

Whoever appertain to the visible body of the church, they have also the notes of external holiness. Watts.

2. Symbol; mark; sign; character; as, "The note of exclamation [!]"

3. A comment or observation on an author, as in elucidation of some passage in the text, usually placed at the bottom of the page, but sometimes contained in a separate book; annotation; remark. "The history of the notes [to Pope's Homer] has never been traced." Johnson.

4. A short writing or record; a memorandum; a minute; as, "To make a note of an event."

5. pl. A writing used by a speaker in pronouncing a discourse, containing either the heads of the discourse or the discourse in full.

I cannot get over the prejudice of taking some little offence at the clergy for perpetually reading their sermons; perhaps my frequent hearing of foreigners, who never make use of notes, may have added to my disgust. Swift.

6. A short letter; a billet. Dryden.

7. A diplomatic communication. Smart.

8. A subscribed paper, acknowledging a debt, and promising payment; as, "A bank-note."

9. Notice; heed; observation. "We take no note of time, but by its loss." Young.

10. The state of being observed. "Small matters . . . continually in use and in note." Bacon.

11. Reputation; distinction; consequence. "Andronicus and Junia, my kinsmen, who are of note among the apostles." Rom. xvi. 7.

12. A musical sound; tune; voice.

The wakeful bird tunes her nocturnal note. Milton.

13. (Mus.) A character which, by its place on the staff, represents a particular sound, and, by its form, determines the time of such sound. — the sound represented by a note. Moore.

—There are six notes in ordinary use, — the semitbreve, minim, crotchet, quaver, semiquaver, and demisemiquaver, each being double the time of the next one to the right. To these may be added the ancient breve, which is twice as long as the semitbreve, and the modern demiquaver, or half-demisemiquaver. P. Cyc.

14. (Printing.) A remark or statement in the margin, or at the foot of the page, containing the book, chapter, date, &c., in referring to an authority; or giving an abstract of some portion of the text, a parallel passage, or a different reading. Brande.

Note of hand, a note on demand. — Shoulder note, (Printing.) a note at the top of the page on the outer margin, containing the book, chapter, or date, or all of them.

Syn. — See REMARK.

NÖTE, v. a. [L. noto; nota, a mark, a note; It. notare; Sp. notar; Fr. noter. — See NOTE, n.] [3. NOTED; pp. NOTING, NOTED.]

1. To mark; to put a note or mark on; to distinguish with a mark.

Can we once imagine that Christ's body . . . was ever afflicted with malady, or enfeebled with infirmity, or marked with deformity? Walsall, 1615.

2. To notice; to remark; to observe.

The gravity and stillness of your youth. The world hath noted, and your name is great in mouths of wisest counsel. Shak.

3. To set down in writing; to make a memorandum of. "Note it in a book." Isa. xxx. 8.

4. To designate; to denote. "The termination [un] notes commonly diminution." Johnson.

NÖTE'WOR-THY (nöt'wür-thē), a. Deserving notice. "Some rare, noteworthy object." Shak.

|| NÖTH'ING (nüth'ing) [nüth'ing, S. W. P. J. E. F. Ja. K. Sm. Wr.; nüth'ing, IV. 5.], n. [no and thing.]

1. No thing; not any thing; nonentity; nihility; non-existence; inexistence.

We say there is nothing in the cup, in a vulgar sense, when we mean there is no liquor in it; but we cannot say there is nothing in the cup, in a strict philosophical sense, while there is air in it. Watts.

2. No quantity, part, or degree. "Nothing of courage." Clarendon.

3. No importance, value, or use.

There is nothing in the seemingly form of the church. Spenser.

4. No possession, estate, or fortune.

A man that from very nothing is grown into an unspeakable estate. Shak.

5. A thing of no proportion.

The charge of making the ground and otherwise is great, but nothing to the profit. Bacon.

6. A thing of no importance; a trifle.

'Tis nothing, says the fool. But, says the friend, This nothing, sir, will bring you to your end. Dryden.

To make nothing of, to make no difficulty or trouble of; to consider light, trifling, or unimportant. "We make nothing of suffering our souls to be slaves to our lusts." Ray.

|| NÖTH'ING, ad. In no degree; not at all. "Auria, nothing dismayed." Knolles.

Adam, with such counsel nothing swayed. Milton.

NÖ'TICE (nũ'tis), n. [L. notitia; nosco, notus, to know; It. notizia; Sp. noticia; Fr. notice.]

1. The act of remarking or observing; cognizance; observation; heed; regard;—usually preceded by take.

The notice of this fact will lead us to some very important conclusions. Trench.

The state of the mind of the native difference betwixt the two is not the same. Shak.

2. Information; intelligence; advice. Shak.

She will beshrew me much that Romeo hath had no notice of these accidents.

3. Intimation beforehand; premonition; warning; as, "He gave him four days' notice."

This is done with little notice. Locke.

4. Respectful attention or treatment; civility.

How ready is envy to mingle with the notices which we take of other persons! Watts.

5. A paper communicating information.

NÖ'TICE, v. a. [i. NOTICED; pp. NOTICING, NOTICED.]

1. To note; to take notice or cognizance of; to observe; to remark; to heed; to regard; to attend to:—to remark upon. T. Howard, 1808.

I shall only stop to notice one principle, which he [Hartley] makes of supreme importance, and that is, the law of transference. Morell.

2. To treat with attention or civility. Wright.

Syn.—See REMARK.

NÖ'TICE-Ä-BLE, a. That may be noticed; worthy of notice or observation; observable. [A modern word, in good use.] Wordsworth.

NÖ'TICE-Ä-BLY, ad. In a noticeable manner; so as to be noticed. Blackwood.

NÖ'TICE-BÖARD, n. A board on which bills or placards may be stuck. Simmonds.

NÖ'TI-CER, n. One who notices. Pope.

NÖ'TI-FI-CÄ'TION, n. 1. The act of notifying or making known; notice; information.

2. A writing or paper communicating notice; an advertisement. Smart.

NÖ'TI-FY, v. a. [L. notifico; notus, known, and facio, to make; It. notificare; Sp. notificar; Fr. notifier.] [i. NOTIFIED; pp. NOTIFYING, NOTIFIED.]

1. To make known; to declare; to publish;—used with to. "There are other kind of laws which notify the will of God." Hooker.

Such protest must also be notified, within fourteen days after, to the drawer. Blackstone.

2. To give notice to; to inform; to apprise; as, "This is to notify the public"; or, "The public are hereby notified."

This use of notify is common in this country, though it is not sanctioned by good English usage; and it was long since censured by Dr. Witherspoon. It is common in this country to say, "I notified him of this matter"; but in England, "I notified this matter to him."

3. To distinguish; to characterize. [R.]

Making them throw light on some great principle which usually marked and notified his hand. W. H.

NÖ'TION (nũ'shun), n. [L. notio; nosco, notus, to know; It. nozione; Sp. notion; Fr. notion.]

1. That rational notice or knowledge of a thing which consists in the perception of relations which it bears to other things, and which is of such a nature that one man's notion of the same thing may be very different from another's, inasmuch as he may perceive different, or more, relations; representation of anything formed by the mind; idea; conception.

It is generally, and often even by metaphysicians, used interchangeably with idea, or conception, or as a general term for mental apprehension.

That notion of hunger, cold, sound, color, thought, wish, or fear, which is in the mind, is called the idea of hunger, cold, sound, color, &c. Watts.

It would be of service to establish a distinction in the usage of "idea" and "notion." Locke and Bolingbroke both attempt it, but with no effect. C. Richardson.

The whole sum of our notions may be reduced to two great classes—those which relate to being and those which relate to power or activity. . . . With respect to the former, the object of the notion is the object with the nervous system, the mind, &c. . . . the mind is the object of the notion.

2. Sentiment; opinion. "The extravagant notion they entertain of themselves." Addison.

3. † Understanding; intellectual power.

So told, as earthly notion can receive. Milton.

4. A small ware; a trifle;—commonly in the plural. [Colloquial and low, U.S.] Pickering.

Syn.—"Notion is more general in its signification than idea. Idea is merely a conception, or at most a necessary and universal conception. Notion implies all this and more,—a judgment or series of judgments, and a certain degree of knowledge of the object. Thus we speak of having no notion or knowledge of a thing, and of having some notion or knowledge." Fleming.—See IDEA, OPINION, PERCEPTION.

NÖ'TION-ÄL, a. 1. Existing in mind or idea only; ideal; imaginary; not real.

Notional good, by fancy only made. Prior.

2. Dealing in notions or ideas, not in realities; visionary. "Notional dictators." Glanvill.

Notional word, a name given by Dr. Becker to a word which expresses notions, or abstract conceptions, that is, things which are the objects of the understanding;—opposed to form-words, or relational words, that is, words which express only relations of our conceptions. Prof. J. W. Gibbs.

All notional words denoting either, first, some real or supposable existence, or, secondly, some real or supposable action. Morell.

NÖ'TION-ÄL'I-TY, n. The quality of being notional; empty, ungrounded opinion. Glanvill.

NÖ'TION-ÄL-LY, ad. In idea or conception only; not in reality. Norris.

NÖ'TION-ÄTE, a. Notional. [R.] Month. Rev.

NÖ'TION-IST, n. One who indulges in odd or extravagant notions or ideas on any subject; a visionary. [R.] Bp. Hopkins.

NÖ-TÖ-NÖC'TÄ, n. [Gr. vōros, the back, and νῆκρς, swimming, from νίχω, to swim.] (Ent.) A genus of hemipterous insects that swim on the back; boat-fly. Brande.

NÖ-TÖ-RĪ-E-TY, n. [It. notorietà; Sp. notoriedad; Fr. notoriété.]—See NOTORIOUS.

1. The state of being notorious, or publicly or generally observed or known; as, "The notoriety of the affair."

2. Public notice or knowledge. "Subjects . . . so exposed to notoriety." Addison.

NÖ-TÖ-RI-OÜS, a. [Mid. L. notorius, pointing out, making known; L. noto, to mark, to designate; It. & Sp. notorio; Fr. notoire.] Publicly or generally known; manifest or evident to the world; apparent; not hidden; conspicuous; noted;—commonly used in a bad sense; as, "A notorious villain"; "A notorious fact."

Syn.—See EVIDENT, NOTED.

NÖ-TÖ-RI-OÜS-LY, ad. So as to be publicly or generally observed or known. South. Dryden.

NÖ-TÖ-RI-OÜS-NÉSS, n. The state of being notorious; notoriety. Overbury.

† NÖTT, a. [A.S. hnót.] Shorn. Chaucer.

† NÖTT, v. a. To shear. Stowe.

† NÖTT'-HÉÄD-ED, a. Having a shorn head. "Nott-headed country gentleman." Chapman.

† NÖTT'-PÄT-ED, a. Having a shorn head. Shak.

NÖ'TV'S, n. [L.] The south wind. Milton.

NÖT'WHEÄT (-hwät), n. [A.S. knot, smooth.] Smooth, unbarbed wheat. Curew.

NÖT-WITH-STÄND'ING, conj. 1. Although.

A person languishing under an ill habit of body may lose several ounces of blood, notwithstanding it will weaken him for a time. Addison.

2. Nevertheless; however. Shak. Luke x. 11.

The knowledge is small which we have on earth concerning things that are done in heaven; notwithstanding, this much we know even of saints in heaven, that they pray. Hooker.

Now little used, in either of the above senses, by good writers. — See NOTWITHSTANDING, prep.

Syn.—See BUT, HOWEVER.

NÖT-WITH-STÄND'ING, prep. Without hindrance or obstruction from; not preventing; in despite or defiance of; in spite of.

Those on whom Christ bestowed his grace were transported, notwithstanding his prohibition. Rev. of Can. Chety.

In these senses, notwithstanding has obviously the force of a preposition, yet it is, when thus used, designated by Ash as an adverb, and by the other English lexicographers it is designated, in all the forms in which it is used, as a conjunction. Dr. Johnson remarks upon it as follows: "This word, though, in conformity to other writers, called here a conjunction, is properly a participial adjective, as it is compounded of not and withstanding, and answers exactly to the Latin non obstante. It is most properly and analogically used in the ablative case absolute, with a noun; as, 'He is rich notwithstanding his loss.' Dr. Webster considers notwithstanding, in all cases, as a participle, "constituting, either with or without this or that, the case absolute or independent." It obviously has more the nature of a participle than of a participial adjective; yet it cannot properly be called a participle, for there is no verb to notwithstanding. In the above example, "He is rich notwithstanding his loss," notwithstanding may be more properly regarded as a preposition, governing loss in the objective case, than construed as a participle in the case absolute with loss.

Syn.—Notwithstanding and in spite of are nearly synonymous, but notwithstanding is the milder expression. Notwithstanding his youth, he has made good progress in his studies;—in spite of great disadvantages, he has made great improvement.

NOUGAT (nũ'gä'), n. [Fr., from L. nux, nucis, a nut.] A sweetmeat composed of sweet almonds and sugar. Merville.

NOUGHT (nawt), n. [A.S. nawuht, nawht, noht.]—See NAUGHT. Nothing.

This word is often written both nought and naught; but as it corresponds to ought (any thing), it is more properly written naught. Dr. Johnson says, "As we write ought, not ought, for any thing, we should, according to analogy, write naught, not nought, for nothing; but a custom has irreversibly prevailed of using naught for bad, and nought for nothing." Walker says, "Commonly, though improperly, written nought." But Smart says, "Nought is the proper spelling when the word is used in the sense of nothing."

† NOÜL, n. The head; noll. Spenser.

† NOÜLD (nald), [nc would.] Would not. "The Goodman would stay." Spenser.

NÖÜ'ME-NÖN, n. [Gr. νοῦς, the mind.] In the philosophy of Kant, an object in itself, not relatively to us;—opposed to phenomenon. Htening.

NÖÜN, n. [L. nomen, a name.—See NAME.] (Gram.) The name of any thing, or a word used as a name;—by some grammarians distinguished into noun-substantive and noun-adjective; by others, restricted to the substantive.

Common noun, the name of a sort, kind, or class; as, "man," "city."—Proper noun, a name appropriated to an individual; as, "John," "London."

† NOÜR'ICE (nũ'r'is), n. [L. nutrix; Fr. nourrice.] A nurse. Sir T. Elyot.

NOÜR'ISH (nũ'r'ish), v. a. [L. nutrio; It. nutrire; Sp. nutrir; Fr. nourrir.] [i. NOURISHED; pp. NOURISHING, NOURISHED.]

1. To feed and cause to grow; to promote the growth or strength of; to supply with nutriment; to nurture.

He planteth an ash, and the rain doth nourish it. Isa. xlv. 14. The food which nourishes the infant is not sufficient for the mother. Macculay.

2. To provide with sustenance; to support; to maintain. "And Joseph nourished his father and his brethren." Gen. xlvii. 12.

3. To encourage; to foster or foment.

What madness was it, with such proofs, to nourish their contentions! Hooker.

4. To rear or bring up; to train; to educate. Pharaoh's daughter took him up, and nourished him for her own son. Acts vii. 21.

Syn.—To nourish and nurture are both derived from the same Latin verb, nutrio, and are used both in a physical and moral sense; nurture, chiefly in a moral sense. Persons nurture, cherish, and foster; persons and things nourish. A mother nourishes her infant with her breast, cherishes it in her bosom, and nurtures it with care, while it is dependent upon her. A child is nourished and nurtured; benevolent feelings are cherished; prejudices are fostered.

Novel dissolutio, (Law.) the name of an old remedy given for a new or recent dissolutio. When a tenant in fee simple, fee tail, or for term of life, was put out, and disseised of his lands or tenements, rents and the like, he might sue out a writ of assize or novel disseisin. Bouvier.
 3. Walker says, "Nothing is so vulgar and childish as to hear novel and heaven with the e distinct, and novel and chicken with the e suppressed." Either the remark is a little extravagant, or prejudices are grown a little more reasonable since it was written." Smart. — It is often pronounced nāv'el in the U. S.
 Syn. — See NEW.
 NŌV'EL, n. 1. † A novelty. Sylvester, 1621.
 2. A species of fictitious composition in prose; a tale; a romance; a fable; a story.
 A comparison between the novel and other imaginative compositions, such as narrative, lyrical, or dramatic poetry, will show that, while the latter depend for their effect on our tastes and sympathies, the former requires us to be interested in the incidents of the plot, as well as in the characters of the persons. P. Cyp.
 3. (Law.) A new or a supplemental constitution. — See NOVEL, a. Ayliffe.
 Syn. — Novel, romance, fable, and tale are all used to denote works of fiction. A story may be either true or false. Novel is a term applied to a work longer and more elaborate than a fable or a tale. A novel treats of the occurrences and manners of recent times, and brings into notice a great variety of characters. A romance treats of wild adventures of a more remote period, particularly of the age of chivalry. A wonderful romance; an interesting novel; an instructive fable; an amusing tale.

fling. [R.] Bacon.

NŪ'GA-TO-RY, a. [L. nugatorius; It. & Sp. nuga- torio.] Trifling; of no importance; trivial; futile; insignificant; worthless. Stewart.

NŪG'GET, n. A lump. "A glittering nugget of the gold of Ophir." Ec. Rev., 1855.

"Nugget is used in Scotland, and means a lump; as, 'A nugget of sugar'; 'A nugget of bread.'" Notes & Queries.

"Since the Californian and Australian discoveries of gold, we hear often of 'a nugget of gold'; and there has been some discussion whether the word had been born for the present necessity, or whether it be a recent malformation of ingot. . . . Nugget, very neatly in its present form, occurs in our elder writers, being spelt nugget by them. ['Nuggets of gold,' North.] There can be little doubt that this is the same word, . . . whilst the early form, nugget, makes more plausible their suggestion that nugget is only ingot disguised." Trench.

NŪG'GET, v. a. To search for nuggets. Clarke.

NŪ'GI-FY, v. n. [L. nuge, trifles, and facio, to make.] To trifle. [R.] Coleridge.

It. numerare; Sp. numerar; Fr. nombrer.] [v.
NUMBERED, pp. NUMBERING, NUMBERED.]
1. To count; to tell or reckon how many.

If a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered. Gen. xiii. 16.

2. To affix a number to; to designate by a number; as, "To number houses."

3. To reckon as one among many. "He was numbered with the transgressors." Isa. liii. 12.

NŪM'BER, n. [Gr. ῥῆπος, any thing assigned or distributed; L. numerus, It. & Sp. numero, Fr. nombre.]
1. That which may be counted or told; an aggregate or assemblage of units; a collection of things of the same kind.

Some few of you shall see the place; and then you may send for your sick and the rest of your number. Bacon.

It has been a question whether the unit 1 is a number. It is not only a number, but is also the base of all numbers. The term "collection," as used in the common definition of number, is technical, and by convention is made to cover the case of a single thing of the kind collected. Davies & Peck.

2. The measure of the relation between quantities or things of the same kind. Davies.

Number, abstractly considered, conveys merely the notion of times or repetitions. Brande.

3. A symbol or character that expresses how many; a numeral character; a figure. P. Cyc.

4. A great assemblage; a multitude; many.

Water-lily hath a root in the ground, and so have a number of other herbs that grow in ponds. Bacon.

Number itself importeth not much in armies, where the people are of weak courage. Bacon.

5. pl. Proportions calculated by number, whether of times as in ancient poetry, or of syllables as in modern poetry. Milton.

6. pl. Verses; poetry; song.

I slipped in numbers, for the numbers came. Pope.

7. (Gram.) The consideration of an object as one or more, or the mode of signifying, by the form of a word, whether it designates one object or more than one.

They joined the most obdurate consonants without one intervening vowel. Swift.

4. "This word is pronounced with the accent on the second syllable by Dr. Johnson, Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Dr. Ash, Mr. Nares, Mr. Elphinstone, Mr. Barclay, Buchanan, and Mr. Perry; and on the first by Bailey, Butick, and W. Johnston. Mr. Scott accents it either on the first or second, but seems to give the preference to the latter. The poets are decidedly in favor of the penultimate accent; and when the usage of poetry does not contradict any plain analogy of prosaic pronunciation, it certainly has a respectable authority. But the verb to indurate is a word of exactly the same form, and has the same derivation; and yet Dr. Johnson, Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Barclay, and Butick place the accent on the first syllable, and my observation fails me if there is not a strong propensity in custom to place the accent on the first syllable of the word in question. This propensity, as there is a plain analogy in favor of it, ought, in my opinion, to be indulged." Walker.

Syn. — See HARD.

† OB'DU-RATE-LY, ad. In an obdurate manner; stubbornly; inflexibly; impenitently.

† OB-DUR'ED-NESS, n. Obduracy. Bp. Hall.

† OB-DURE'NESS, n. Obduracy. Bp. Hall.

Q-BÉ'AH, n. A kind of witchcraft, prevalent among the negroes of the West Indies, said to have been introduced from Africa. Wright.

† Q-BÉ'DI-BLE, a. Obedient. Bp. Hall.

† Q-BÉ'DI-ÉNCE [q-bé'de-éns, P. J. Ja. Sm. C. B. Wr.; q-bé'dy-éns, S. E. F. K.; q-bé'dje-éns, W.], n. [L. obedientia; It. obediencia; Sp. obediencia; Fr. obéissance.] The act of obeying, or the quality of being obedient; submission to authority; compliance with command or prohibition; submissiveness: — obsequiousness.

To prayer, repentance, and obedience due, Though but endeavored with sincere intent, Mine ear shall not be slow, mine eye not shut. Milton.

Passive obedience, unqualified submission or obedience to authority, however unreasonable or unlawful the commands may be.

"The doctrine of passive obedience, or non-resistance, was strongly professed by the Church of England in the time of King James I." Brande.

Syn. — Obedience is used in a good sense; submission is relatively good, but it may be indifferent or bad; obsequiousness is always taken in a bad sense. Obedience is proper submission to authority; obsequiousness, servile submission or compliance. — Passive obedience is unqualified submission to authority or government, however arbitrary or oppressive.

† Q-BÉ'DI-ÉN-CI-A-RY, n. One who is obedient. John Fox.

† Q-BÉ'DI-ÉNT, a. [L. obediens; It. & Sp. obediante; Fr. obéissant.] Submissive to authority; compliant with command or prohibition; dutiful; deferential: — compliant; obsequious.

Religion hath a good influence upon the people to make them obedient to government and peaceable one towards another. Elliotson.

Syn. — Obedient servant; obedient or dutiful child; submissive to proper authority; obsequious in order to gain favor; obsequious flatterer.

† Q-BÉ'DI-ÉNTIAL, a. [Fr. obéissantiel.] Obedient; according to the rule of obedience. [R.]

There is no such way of giving God the glory of his infinite knowledge as by an obedient practice of those duties and commands, which seem most to thwart and contradict our own. South.

† Q-BÉ'DI-ÉNT-LY, ad. In an obedient manner; with obedience; submissively. Tillotson.

P. E. O. W. b.], n. [Fr. obéissance; ob'ir, to obey.] "Formed by corruption from abaisance, an act of reverence." Johnson. A token of willingness to obey; an act of civility or reverence made by inclination of the body or knee; a bow or a courtesy.

The obéissance with a low obéissance made. Dryden.

4. "Not a corruption of abaisance or a lowering of the body, though it comes to the same thing." Smart.

5. "I must retract my former pronunciation of this word, which made the diphthong ei like e in obedience, and adopt the sound of a as in the ey of obey. For the former sound we have Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, and Mr. Perry; and for the latter, Mr. Nares, Mr. Elphinstone, Mr. Scott, and W. Johnston. But if the authorities for this pronunciation were less weighty than they are, analogy would be clearly on the side I have adopted, as ei, when under the accent, is much more frequently pronounced like ey in obey than like ey in key, the latter word and key being the only exceptions to the general rule of pronouncing ey when accented; and these letters, we know, are perfectly equivalent to ei." Walker.

† Q-BÉ'SAN-CY, n. Same as OBEISANCE. Pollok.

† Q-BÉ'SANT (q-bé'sant or q-bé'sant), a. Submissive to authority; obedient. [R.] Scott.

† OB-E-LIS'CAL, a. Having the form of an obelisk. "An obeliskal stone." [R.] Stukeley.

† OB'E-LISK, n. [Gr. obeliskos; obelis, a spit, a pointed pillar; o prefixed for euphony, and belis, a missile; L. obeliscus; It. & Sp. obelisco; Fr. obelisque.]

1. A lofty, quadrangular, monolithic column, the base narrow, and the sides diminishing gradually until they terminate near the top, in a pointed four-sided pyramid.

2. "It has been frequently asserted that obelisks were originally erected in honor of the sun, of which they were said to be symbolical, and that they served the purposes of a gnome or sun-dial; but this opinion is now almost totally rejected, and it is generally believed that obelisks were nothing more than monumental structures, serving as ornaments to the open squares in which they were generally built, or intended to celebrate some important event, and to perpetuate its remembrance. They were usually adorned with hieroglyphics." Brande.

2. (Printing.) A mark of reference, thus [+]; a dagger; — sometimes used as a mark of censure, or to denote that a word is obsolete. Grev.

† OB'E-LISK, v. a. To mark with an obelisk, as in writing or printing. [R.] Ch. Ob.

† OB'E-LIZE, v. a. To mark with an obelisk; to mark as spurious or as suspicious. Ed. Rev.

† OB'E-LUS, n.; pl. OB'E-LI. [L., from Gr. obelos, a needle.] (Diplomatics.) A mark to denote a suspected passage in a book or manuscript; usually thus (—), or thus (÷). Brande.

† OB-ÉQ'UI-TÁ-TION, n. A riding. Cockeram.

† OB'E-RÖN, n. (Medieval Myth.) The fabled king of the fairies.

4. "Elberich (the Albrich of the 'Nibelungen Lied'), as we have said, is Oberon. From the usual change of i into u (as ai, au, coi, con, &c.), in the French language, Elberich, or Albrich, (derived from Alp, Alf [an elf or fairy]), becomes Auberich; and Alp not being a French termination, the diminutive on was substituted, and so it became Auberion, or Oberon; a much more likely origin than the usual one from L'Aube du jour." Keightley.

† Q-BÉS', a. [L. obesus; ob, used intensively, and edo, to eat.] Excessively fat or fleshy; very corpulent; gross. Gayton. Sydney Smith.

† Q-BÉS'E'NESS, n. Obesity. Bp. Gauden.

† Q-BÉS'-ITY, n. [L. obesitas; It. obesità; Sp. obesidad; Fr. obésité.] Excessive fatness or fleshiness; inordinate corpulence. Grev.

† Q-BÉY' (q-bé'), v. a. [L. obedio; ob, used intensively, and audio, to hear; It. obedire; Sp. obedecer; Fr. obéir.] 2. OBEYED; pp. OBEYING, OBEYED.] To yield obedience or submission to; to comply with, from reverence to authority.

Love and obedience to her lord she bore; She much obeyed him, but she loved him more. Dryden.
Let them obey who know not how to rule. Shak.

Some of our old writers used it as a néb verb, after the Latin and the French idiom, with toi.
His servants ye are to whom ye obey. Rom. vi. 16.
Yet to their general's voice they soon obeyed. Milton.
Syn. — See FOLLOW.

† Q-BÉY'ÉR (q-bá'ér), n. One who obeys. Price.

† Q-BÉY'ING-LY, ad. In an obedient manner.

† Q-B-FIRM', v. a. [L. obfirmo.] To render firm, obstinate, or obdurate. Bp. Hall.

† Q-B-FIR'MATE, v. a. [L. obfirmo, obfirmatus.] To harden in resolution; to obfirm. Sheldon.

† Q-B-FUS'CATE, v. a. [L. ob, used intensively, and fusco, to obscure; It. offuscare, Sp. ofuscar, Fr. obscurcir.] 2. OBFUSCATED; pp. OBFUSCATING, OBFUSCATED.] To darken over; to cloud; to obscure. Waterhouse.

† Q-B-FUS'QATE, a. Darkened; obfuscated. Elyot.

† OB-FUS-CÁ-TION, n. Act of darkening. Burton.

† OB'BIT, or OB'IT [ób'it, W. P. E. K. Sm. R. B. Wr.; ób'it, S. F. C. O. W. b.], n. [A corruption of the L. obit, or obitit, he died.]

1. A funeral ceremony or office for the dead; a funeral rite; obsequies. Dayton.
2. Death; decease. Smart.
3. The time of a person's death. Wood.
4. The anniversary of the death of a benefactor, as the founder of a college.

In many of our colleges, the obit, or anniversary of the death of the founder, is piously observed. Hook.

5. A particular length of slate. Simmonds.

Post obit (L. post obitum), after death.

† OB'I-TÉR, ad. [L.] By the way.
The law concerning it is delivered obiter only. Blackstone.

† Q-BÍT'U-AL, a. Relating to deaths or to funeral ceremonies; obituary. Smart.

† Q-BÍT'U-A-RÍ-LY, ad. In the manner of an obituary. Wright.

† Q-BÍT'U-A-RY, n. [Sp. obituario; Fr. obituaire.] A register of deaths; an account of deceased persons or of a deceased person; necrology.

† Q-BÍT'U-A-RY, a. Relating to deaths or to funerals; ceremonious; obitual. Gibbs.

† Q-B-JÉCT', v. a. [L. obijicio, objectus; ob, in the way, and jacio, to throw; It. obiettare; Sp. objetar; Fr. objeter.] 2. OBJECTED; pp. OBJECTING, OBJECTED.]

1. To cast or place in front; to put before; to throw or place in the way.

The mist objected, and condensed the skies. Pope.

2. To propose adversely, as a reason or charge; to state or urge, in opposition; — frequently followed by to or against.

Others object the poverty of the nation, and difficulties in furnishing greater supplies. Addison.
It was objected against a late painter, that he drew many graceful pictures, but few of them were like. Dryden.

† Q-B-JÉCT', v. n. To oppose in words or arguments; — followed by to, formerly by against.

The king's mother objected openly against his marriage. Nor T. More.

† OB'JECT, n. [L. objectus; It. oggetto; Sp. objeto; Fr. objet.]

1. That which is presented to the senses or to the mind, and raises an affection or emotion.

The object of the present is, to show the nature and extent of the object. Shak.

2. That to which the mind directs itself; any thing aimed at, or proposed to be attained; purpose; design; intent; end; aim; view.

It ought not to be the leading object of any one to become an eminent metaphysician, mathematician, or poet, but to render himself happy as an individual, and an agreeable, a respectable, and a useful member of society. Stewart.

3. (Grammar.) That which is influenced or acted on by something else, as a noun or pronoun governed by a verb or a preposition. Clarke.

Syn. — Object and subject are often used indiscriminately, but improperly. We notice an object, and reflect on a subject. Objects are sensible; subjects, intellectual. A subject of reflection, of a treatise, a poem; an object of interest; a multiplicity of objects.

"The subject is properly, id in quo [that in which]; the object, id circa quod [that about which]. Hence, in psychological language, the subject absolutely is the mind that knows or thinks, i. e. the mind as considered as the subject of knowledge or thought; the object, that which is known or thought about." Sir Wm. Hamilton. — In the Middle Ages, subject meant substanter, and has this sense in Descartes and Spinoza, sometimes also in Reid. Kant and Fichte have inverted the meaning: subject is the mind which knows; object, that which is known: subjective, the varying conditions of the knowing mind; objective, that which is in the constant nature of the thing known. Fleming.—See AIM.

† OB'JECT, a. Opposed; presented against.

His mercy is so object even unto sense. Sanctus.

† OB'JECT'ABLE, a. That may be objected, or opposed; objectionable. Bp. Taylor.

OB'JECT-GLASS, n. The glass of a telescope, or microscope, which is nearest to the object, and farthest from the eye. Brande.

OB'JECT-IFY, v. a. To form into an object.

This letter or sign is, in the language of modern philosophers, the idea objectified. Morell.

OB'JECT'ION, n. [L. objectio; It. obbiezione; Sp. objeccion; Fr. objection.]

1. The act of objecting. Johnson.

2. That which is, or may be, objected; adverse argument, reason, or charge.

Their scholastic divinity must make objections against every truth, be it never so plain. Tyndale.

OB'JECT'ION-ABLE, a. Liable to objection; that may justly be objected to; exceptible.

OB'JECT-IST, n. One versed in the objective philosophy or doctrine. [R.] Ec. Rev.

OB'JECTIVE [ob-jék-tív, IV. P. J. F. Ja. Sm. Wr.; ob-jék-tív, S. J.] a. [L. objectivus; It. obbiettivo; Sp. objetivo; Fr. objectif.]

1. Relating to the object; contained in the object; extrinsic.—relating to the object of thought, and not to the thinker; opposed to subjective:—having the quality of coming in the way; as, “Objective certainty,” i. e. certainty in outward things, in distinction from subjective certainty, which lies in the mind itself. The former is called physical, the latter metaphysical, certainty.

Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective. Objective certainty is when the proposition is certainly true in itself, and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. The one is in things, and the other is in our minds. Watts.

2. In the philosophy of the mind, subjective denotes what is to be referred to the thinking subject, the ego; objective, what belongs to the object of thought, the non ego. Sir Wm. Hamilton.—See SUBJECTIVE.

3. “Objective is now used to describe the absolute independent state of a thing; but by the elder metaphysicians it was applied to the aspect of things as objects of sense or understanding. So Berkeley: ‘Natural phenomena are only natural appearances. They are, therefore, such as we see and perceive them. Their real and objective natures are, therefore, one and the same.’” Sir Wm. Hamilton, sect. 292, where real and objective are expressly distinguished. Fitzgerald.

4. (Gram.) Noting the case which follows a verb or participle active, or a preposition; accusative.

OB'JECTIVE, n. (Gram.) The objective case.

OB'JECTIVE-LY, ad. In an objective manner; applied to the manner or state of an object, as existing externally with respect to the mind.

OB'JECT'IVENESS, n. The state or the quality of being an object; objectivity. Hale.

OB'JECT-IV'ITY, n. The quality or the state of being objective; objectiveness. Coleridge.

OB'JECT-LESS, a. Having no object. Coleridge.

OB'JECT'OR, n. One who offers objection.

OB'JECT'OR, n. [L. objektor, objiciens.] An objector; an opponent. [R.] Cardinal Wiseman.

OB-JU-RATION, n. [L. objuro, objuratus, to bind by oath.] Act of binding by oath. Mander.

OB-JUR'GATE, v. a. [L. objurgo, objurgatus; ob, against, and jurgo, to strive.] 1. OBJURGATED; pp. OBJURGATING, OBJURGATED.] To chide; to reprove; to reprehend. [R.] Cockeram.

OB-JUR-GATION, n. [L. objurgatio; It. objurgazione; Fr. objurgation.] The act of reproving or rebuking; reprehension. Bramhall.

OB-JUR-GA-TORY, a. [L. objurgatorius; It. objurgatorio.] Reprehensory; culpatory. Paley.

OB-LAN'CE-Q-LATE, a. (Bot.) Lance-shaped with the tapering point downwards. Gray.

OB-LATE, a. [L. ob, against, and fero, latus, to bear.] (Geom.) Compress. 1 or flattened at the poles.

Oblate spheroid, the volume generated by the revolution of an ellipse about its conjugate axis. The figure of the earth is that of an oblate spheroid. Da. & P.

OB-LATE'NESS, n. The quality or the state of being oblate. Wright.

OB-LATION, n. [L. oblatio; offero, oblatus, to offer; ob, before, and fero, to bring; It. oblazione; Sp. oblacion; Fr. oblation.]

1. An offering; a sacrifice.

The blessed oblation of the holy mass. Sir T. More.
Then scattered on his tomb her hoary hairs,
A poor oblation, mingled with her tears. Druiden.

2. This oblation of a heart fixed with dependence on, and affection to, him, is the most acceptable tribute we can pay him, the foundation of true devotion and life of all religion. Locke.

3. Alms given to the poor, or for the use of the priesthood.

The basin stands the board upon
To take the free oblation. Herrick.

† OB-LATION-ER, n. One who makes an oblation. “An oblationer before the Almighty.” More.

† OB-LAT'RATE, v. n. [L. oblato, oblatus.] To bark or rail against. Cockeram.

† OB-LAT'RATION, n. A snarling at. Bp. Hall.

† OB-LÉC-TATION, n. [L. oblectatio.] Delight; pleasure; delectation. Feltham.

OB-LI-GATE, v. a. [L. obligo, obligatus.] 1. OBLIGATED; pp. OBLIGATING, OBLIGATED.] To bind by contract or by duty; to place under obligation; to oblige. Bailey. G. F. Clark.

2. Richardson, in speaking of oblige and obligeate, says, “Among the common people obligeate is the more usual word.” The “British Critic” styles it “a low, colloquial inaccuracy”; and Smart says, “It is a word never heard among people who conform to the modern idiom of the upper classes, but is otherwise in frequent use.” It is much used in the U. S.

OB-LI-GATION, n. [L. obligatio; It. obbligazione; Sp. obligacion; Fr. obligation.]

1. That which binds; the binding power of an oath, vow, duty, promise, or contract; a duty imposed by law, human or divine, to the fulfillment of which one party is bound towards another.

Moral obligation, being the obligation of a free agent, implies a law; and a law implies a lawgiver. The will of God, therefore, is the true ground of all obligation, strictly and properly so called. Fleming.

While she exacts allegiance, shall admit
An obligation, on her part, to teach
Them who are born to serve her and obey. Wordsworth.

2. An act which binds a man to some performance; a contract; a bond. Taylor.

3. The binding power or force of gratitude; a favor by which one is bound in gratitude.

4. (Law.) A bond with condition and penalty annexed. Brande.

Syn.—See DUTY.

OB-LI-GAT'ION, n. (Mus.) See OBLIGATO. Brande.

OB-LI-GA-TORY-LY, ad. In an obligatory manner; by obligation. Johnson.

OB-LI-GA-TORY-NESS, n. The quality of being obligatory or binding. Scott.

OB-LI-GA-TORY [ob-lí-ga-tór-ē, W. J. F. Ja. R.; ob-lí-ga-tór-ē, S. E.; ob-lí-ga-tór-ē, K. Sm. Wr.], a. [It. obbligatorio; Sp. obligatorio; Fr. obligatoire.] Imposing or implying an obligation; binding; coercive;—used with on or upon.

The various duties which have now been considered all agree with each other in one common quality, that of being obligatory on rational and voluntary agents. Stewart.

† OB-LIG'ER [o-blij', Ja. K. Sm. C. O. W. b.; o-blij' or o-blij', S. W. P. F.; o-blij', J. E.], v. a. [L. obligo; ob, used intensively, and ligo, to bind; It. obbligare; Sp. obligar; Fr. obliger.] 1. OBLIGED; pp. OBLIGING, OBLIGED.]

1. To bind or constrain by physical, moral, or legal force; to impose obligations upon.

To be obliged is to be urged by a violent motive resulting from the command of another. Paley.

Religion obliges men to the practice of those virtues which conduce to the preservation of our health. Milton.

2. To lay under obligations of gratitude; to put into debt, or cause to be indebted.

To those hills we are obliged for all our metals. Bentley.

3. To please; to gratify; to accommodate.

Some natures are so sour and so ungrateful, that they are never to be obliged. L'Estrange.

2. “When Lord Chesterfield wrote his Letters to his son, the word oblige was, by many polite speakers, pronounced as if written oblige,—as if to give a hint of their knowledge of the French language; nay, Pope has rhymed it to this sound:—

“Depending even fools, by flatterers besieged,
And so obliging that he never is repaid.”

But it was so far from having generally obtained, that Lord Chesterfield strictly enjoined his son to avoid this pronunciation as affected. In a few years, however, it became so general that none but the lowest vulgar ever pronounced it in the English manner; but upon the publication of this nobleman's Letters, which was about twenty years after he wrote them, his authority had so much influence with the polite world as to bid fair for restoring the i in this word to its original rights; and we not unfrequently hear it now pronounced with the broad English i in those circles where, a few years ago, it would have been an infallible mark of vulgarity. Walker.

Smart says, “The word oblige, which was formerly classed with marine, &c., is now pronounced regularly.” John Kemble is said to have corrected the Prince of Wales [George IV.] for adhering to the former pronunciation, by saying, “It will become your royal mouth better to say oblige.”

Syn.—See BIND.

|| Q-BLIGED, p. a. Compelled; forced:—bound in gratitude; favored.

Syn.—See INDEBTED.

ÖD, or ÖD, n. [Gr. ὀδός, way.] A term applied by Reichenbach to the fancied force which gives rise to the phenomena of electro-biology, or mesmerism, and which he imagined to be developed by magnets, crystals, heat, light, electricity, chemical action, vital action, the human hand, and various other agents; the odylic force; odyle.

"Leaving the etymological derivation to be justified at some other opportunity, I will take the liberty to propose the short word od for the force which we are engaged in examining. Every one will admit it to be desirable that a unisyllabic word beginning with a vowel should be selected for an object which occurs universally in an infinity of complex conditions of the material world, for the sake of convenient conjunction in the manifold compound words. . . . If, then, the term od shall be found acceptable in general use for the force . . . for which we require and seek a name, the nomenclature for all its various kinds of derivation may be easily formed by composition, — avoiding all circumlocutions; instead of saying, 'the od derived from crystallization,' we may name this product crystallo-d, that from heat, thermo-d, that from electricity, briefly as elod, from light, photo-d, and so on, — magneto-d, chymo-d, helo-d, artemo-d, tribo-d, and for the material world generally, panto-d, &c." Reichenbach.

ÖD'A-LISK, n. [Turk. oda, a chamber, because odalisks are lodged in separate chambers, or, according to others, because they lodge and live in common in two large apartments called odas. Landais. — Fr. odalisque.] A female slave employed in domestic service about the persons of the wives, female relatives, &c., of the sultan; — also written odalisque and odahk. Byron.

2. Wanting a match; unmatched; as, "An odd glove":—having no one associated or united; left out of a set, number, or account; as, "An odd volume."

3. Exceeding a round number, or a specified number; not taken in with others; supernumerary; as, "Odd years, days, minutes," &c.

Sixteen hundred and odd years after the earth was made, it was destroyed by a deluge. Barnes.

4. Particular; peculiar; uncommon; strange; singular; eccentric; fantastic; whimsical; as, "An odd fancy, opinion, person, or thing."

5. Noting the only one.

For our time, the odd man to perform all things perfectly, whatever he doth, and to know the way to do them skillfully, whenever he list, is, in my poor opinion, Joannes Sturm. Ascham.

"Home Tooke appears to me to have erred in deriving od from ooved. If I say, 'There are three pairs and one odd one,' the odd refers to the single one, and not to the one which is wanting, yet Mr. Tooke refers it to the latter." Dr. Crombie.

Syn. — An odd glove; an odd or uneven number; an odd, eccentric, or singular person; a strange or uncommon occurrence; a fantastical or whimsical notion. — See PARTICULAR.

ÖDE, n. [Gr. ὕδης; δεῖω, to sing; L. ode; It. & Sp. ode; Fr. ode.] A short song or poem; a lyric composition.

"Among the Greeks and Romans [the ode] was a short lyric composition usually intended to be sung, and accompanied by some musical instrument, generally the lyre; hence the expression lyric verse. In the modern sense of the word, the ode appears to be distinguished from the song by greater length and variety, and by not being necessarily adapted to music. It is distinguished also from the ballad, and other species of lyric poetry, by its being confined to the expression of sentiment, or of imaginative thought, on a given subject not admitting of narrative, except incidentally." Brande.

ÖDE'-FÄC-TÖR, n. One who traffics in odes.

ÖDE'-MÄK-ER, n. A composer of odes. Pope.

Ö-DE'ÖN, n. [Gr. ὀδεῖον; ὀδή, a song; L. odeum; It. odeon; Fr. odéon.] (Greecian Ant.) A public building devoted to the contests of poets and musicians for honorary prizes, as the theatre was devoted to the drama, and the amphitheatre to gladiatorial shows; odeum. Fairholt.

"The word odeon has been preserved in most languages. Thus there is an Odeon in Paris, appropriated to theatrical and other similar purposes; and in Munich there is a concert-room with this name." Brande.

This word, when applied to a modern building, is often incorrectly pronounced ö-de-ön.

ÖD'ER-ITE, n. (Mín.) A mineral found in Sweden, and supposed to be a variety of black mica. Eng. Cyc.

One that loved not wisely, but too well. Shak. Edward I. was one who very well knew how to use a victory, as well as obtain it. Hale.

3. The symbol representing one; as, 1.

ÖN Though one, in some of its uses, is called a noun by Johnson, and other English lexicographers generally, yet it may perhaps more properly, in all cases, be regarded as an adjective or a pronoun.

ÖN is used indefinitely, without specifying any particular individual; but when so used it is distinguished from the numeral one, and considered to be the Fr. on, which the etymologists Menage and Roquefort derive from the Old Fr. hom, man. Thus, On dit, On fait, are Hom dit, Hom fait. Ascham observes that formerly the English used men where they now use one. But such usage was established long before Ascham's time." Richardson.

At one, in agreement or union. "The king resolved to keep Ferdinand and Philip at one with themselves." Bacon.—In one, in a united body; in union. "These three agree in one." 1 John v. 8.—One o'clock is an elliptical expression for, and contracted from, one of the clock.

The earliest lexicographic work on record is an onomasticon of uncertain character, ascribed to the Sicilian rhetor Gorgias (440 B. C.); onomasticon denoting properly a collection of names or nouns, rather than of miscellaneous phrases. Qu. Rev.

ÖN-Q-MÄ-TĒCH'NY, n. [Gr. δνομα, a name, and τέχνη, art.] Divination by the letters of a name; onomancy. Rowbotham.

Ö-NÖM-A-TÖL'Q-GĪST, n. One skilled in the science of names. Clarke.

Ö-NÖM-A-TÖL'Q-ÜY, n. [Gr. δνομα, a name, and λόγος, a discourse.] The science of names. Clarke.

Ö-NÖM'A-TÖPE, } n. A word whose sound cor-

ÖN-Q-MAT'Q-PY, } responds to the sound of the thing signified, as baa, the noise of the sheep; an onomatopœia. Buchanan.

ÖN-Q-MÄT-Q-PCE'IA (-pē'ya), n. [L., from Gr. δνομαστική; δνομα, a word, and ποιέω, to make.] 1. (Rhet.) The use of a word or phrase, the sound of which corresponds with or resembles the thing signified, as in the following example:

Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell,
Hark! now I hear them, ding-dong-bell. Shak.

2. An imitative word. Sir John Stoddart.

Ö-NÖM-A-TÖ-PQ-ET'IC, a. [Gr. δνομαστικη.] Formed to resemble the sound of the thing signified. Robinson.

ÖN'SÉT, n. 1. A rushing or setting upon; an attack; a storm; an assault; the first burst.

As well the soldier dieth which standeth still, as he that gives the bravest onset. Shak.

2. A beginning; a commencement. [R.] Shak.

Syn.—See ATTACK.

† ÖN'SÉT, v. a. To set upon; to begin. Carew.

ÖN'SÉT-TING, n. A rushing; onset. Clarke.

ÖN'SLAUGHT (ön'slāwt), n. [A. S. onslagan.] Attack; charge; assault; onset. Hudibras.

Niebuhr's onslaught on the credibility of a portion of the Latin historians. Ch. Ob.

—Johnson designates this word as "not in use"; but since his time its use has been revived.

ÖN'STĒAD, n. [Probably a corruption of homestead.] Simmonds. A single farm-house;—called also an onset. [Local, Eng.] Wright.

ÖN'TÖ, prep. Noting entrance upon a place; on; upon; to. "They went out onto the Mount of Olives." Mark xiv. 26, Sharpe's Trans.

—This word is in provincial use in England, and in colloquial use in the United States; but it is little authorized by the use of good writers. Forby, in his "Vocabulary of East Anglia," says, "For the preposition upon we use onto, (why not as good as into)? Ec.: 'Throw some coals onto the fire.' Into is now generally, and probably has always in a great measure been, used with respect to in, as denoting motion. We use onto with a like relation to on; so, probably, do other provincials, and on the same warrant of antiquity. The analogy is certainly good."

"There is an awkwardness prevalent amongst all classes of society in such sentences as the following: 'He got on to the stage coach'; 'He jumped on to the floor'; 'I threw it on to the floor.'" P. Guyana.

ÖN-TQ-LÖG'IC, } a. [Fr. ontologique.—See

2. "Any stone exhibiting layers of two or more colors, strongly contrasted, is called an onyx." Brande.

3. (Med.) An abscess of the cornea of the eye;—so called from its resemblance to an onyx stone. Brande.

Ö-Q-LITE, n. [Gr. ὄλιθ, an egg, and λίθος, a stone; It. olithe; Fr. oolithe.] (Geol.) A species of limestone rock characteristic of one of the great systems of secondary strata; reef-stone.

—"The substance of oolithe rocks consists principally of carbonate of lime, sometimes crystallized, at others granular, and usually abounding in organic remains, as shells, &c. It consists of two parts, one of which forms the matrix, is mostly colorless, often crystalline, and exhibits a number of rounded or oval cavities, each of which contains a nodule, or mass, of a corresponding form. These nodules give the stone somewhat the appearance of the roe of a fish; hence oolithe is sometimes called reef-stone." Mic. Diet.

Ö-Q-LIT'IC, a. Relating to, or resembling, oolithe.

On the continent of Europe, the oolithe system is known as "Jura kalk" and "calcaire jurassique," from the conspicuous development of the strata in the Jura Mountain. Smithson.

OPHITE, n. [Gr. ophis, a serpent.]
1. (Min.) Serpentine, or green porphyry.

It is "Chromic iron is often disseminated through it, giving it a mottled appearance, somewhat similar to the skin of a snake, whence the name serpentine or ophite." Dana.

2. One of a Gnostic sect of the second century, who derived their name from the veneration they had for the serpent that tempted Eve, which they pretended was Jesus Christ. Eden.

OPH-I-T'PHUS (88-a-d'kus), n. [Gr. Ὀφίτης; ophis, a serpent, and τῆς, to have.] A constellation of the southern hemisphere; the Serpent-bearer.

Take a serpent by the head.
That fires the length of typhus by the head.
In the Arctic sky. Milton.

OPH-THÄL'MI-G, n. Ophthalmus. Dunglison.

OPH-THÄL'MIC (op-thäl'mik or of-thäl'mik) [op-thäl'mik, H. P. J. Ja. Sm.; of thäl'mik, S. E. K. R. C. W. — See TRYPHONOL, a.] [Gr. ὀφθαλμός; It. & Sp. oftalmico; Fr. ophthalmique.] Relating to the eye. Johnson.

"Two aspirations in succession, says Mr. Elphinstone, seem disagreeable to an English ear, and therefore one of them is generally sunk. Thus ph and th in typhus are pronounced diph and triph. P is lost, as well as h, in ophthalmus; and therefore it is no wonder we hear the first h dropped in ophthalmus and ophthalmic, which is the pronunciation I have adopted as agreeable to analogy. Nay, such an assertion does seem to have a succession of aspirates, that the h is sunk in typhus, typhus, and Demetrius, because the s, which is akin to the aspirate, immediately precedes." Walker.

OPH-THÄL-MÖG'RA-PHY, n. [Gr. ὀφθαλμός, an eye, and γράφω, to describe.] That part of anatomy which gives a description of the eye: — an anatomical description of the eye. Dunglison.

OP'PO-SITE (op'po-zīt), a. [L. oppositus; It. opposto; Sp. opuesto; Fr. opposite.]

1. Placed in front; facing; on the other side.
As I bent down to look, just opposite
A shape within the watery gleam appeared,
Bending to look on me. Milton.
2. Adverse; opposed; repugnant; hostile.
But say, wert thou possessed of David's throne,
By free consent of all, none opposite,
Samaritan or Jew? Milton.
3. Contrary, different in nature and quality; unlike. "Opposite terms." Tillotson.
Particles of speech have divers, and sometimes almost opposite, significations. Locke.

Syn.—There is an essential difference between opposite and contrary. Opposite powers are of the same kind, as positive and negative electricity are opposites. Sweet and sour are opposites; sweet and bitter, contraries. The feminine character is opposed to the masculine; but the effeminate is its contrary. We say the opposite, not the contrary, sides of the street.—See ADVERSE.

"How often opposite and contrary are used as if there was no difference between them, and yet there is a most essential one,—one which we may perhaps best express by saying that opposites complete, while contraries exclude, one another. Thus the most opposite moral and mental characteristics may meet in one and the same person, while to say the most contrary did so, would be manifestly absurd;—for example, a man may be at once prudent and bold, for these are opposites; he could not be at once prudent and rash, for these are contraries. Sweet and sour are opposites; sweet and bitter are contraries." Trench.—See ADVERSE.

OP'PO-SITE, n. He who, or that which, is adverse; an opponent. Dryden.

OP'PO-SITE-LY, ad. In an opposite manner; on the other side; adversely. Grew.

OP'PO-SITE-NĒSS, n. State of being opposite.

OP-PŌS'[-T]-FŌ-L-OŪS, a. [opposite and foli-ous.] (Bot.) Noting a peduncle placed opposite to the leaf. Smart.

OP-PŌ-SIT'ION (op-pō-zīsh'un), n. [L. oppositio; It. opposizione; Sp. oposición; Fr. opposition.]

1. The act of opposing.
I mean, my lord, the opposition of your person in trial. Shak.
2. Position so as to front something else; the state of being opposite.
Before mine eyes in opposition sits
Grim Death, my son and foe, who sets them on. Milton.
3. State of being opposed; state of one thing as compared or contrasted with another.
There is the opposition of relation between the double and the half of contrariety in two evil and evil, blindness and seeing are opposed in the way of privation and possession; the propositions, He sits, and He does not sit, in the way of negation and affirmation. Fleming.
4. Hostile resistance; counteraction; hostility. "The opposition of his enemies." Dryden.
Virtue, which breaks through all opposition. Milton.
5. (Politics.) In England, the collective body of members from both houses of Parliament who oppose the ministry, or the measures of government, and who usually succeed to power on the dissolution of the existing ministry;—in the United States, the party that opposes the administration or the party in power. "A member of the opposition." Burke.
The right honorable gentleman would be at the head of the most violent and clamorous opposition that the country ever witnessed. Shirburn.
6. (Astron.) The situation of a heavenly body with respect to the sun, when its longitude differs 180°, or half the circumference. Hind.
Thus the moon or a planet is said to be in opposition with the sun when it passes the meridian at midnight. Brande.

OP-PŌ-SIT'ION-IST (op-pō-zīsh'un-ist), n. One of the opposition, or one of the party that is opposed to the existing ministry, administration, or party in power. Byron.

OP-PŌS'[-T]-IVE, a. That may be put in opposition. Hall.

OP-PRĒSS', v. a. [L. opprimo, oppressus; ob, against, and premo, to press; It. oppressare; Sp. oprimir; Fr. oppresser.] [2. OPPRESSED; pp. OPPRESSING, OPPRESSED.]

1. To crush by a heavy burden, hardship, or severity; to bear down; to overwhelm.
I am oppressed, unlike my dream;
I am oppressed, I am already. Shak.
2. To overpower; to subdue.
The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely. Shak.

1. The act of oppressing; cruelty; severity; a ruthless domination; tyranny.
Oppression makes wise men mad, but the distemper is still the madness of the wise, which is better than the sobriety of fools. Dunke.
2. The state of being oppressed; misery; hardship; calamity.
Cesar himself has work; and our oppression
Exceeds what we expected. Shak.
3. (Med.) A state in which the patient experiences a sensation of weight in the part affected;—used abstractedly for oppression of the chest:—that condition, at the commencement of fevers, &c., in which the system is oppressed rather than debilitated. Dunghison.

Syn.—See TYRANNY.

OP-PRĒSS'IVE, a. [It. oppressivo; Sp. opresivo; Fr. oppressif.]

1. Causing or inflicting oppression; cruel; inhuman; unjustly severe; hard; rigorous; tyrannical. "Oppressive taxation." Eustace.
2. Heavy; overwhelming; overpowering.
To ease the soul of one oppressor's weight,
This quits an empire, that embroils a state. Pope.

Syn.—See HARD.

OP-PRĒSS'IVE-LY, ad. In an oppressive or severe manner. Burke.

OP-PRĒSS'IVE-NĒSS, n. The quality of being oppressive. Richardson.

OP-PRĒSS'OR, n. One who oppresses; a tyrant.
The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely. Shak.

† OP-PRĒSS'URE, n. Oppression. B. Jonson.

OP-PRŌ-BRI-OŪS, a. [L. opprobrius; opprobrium, opprobrium; It. obprobrio; Sp. oprobio; Fr. opprobre.]

1. Reproachful; disgraceful; causing infamy; scurrilous; abusive; insolent; offensive.
They see themselves unjustly aspersed, and vindicate themselves in terms no less opprobrious than those by which they are attacked. Addison.
2. Blasted with infamy; infamous. "His opprobrious name."
Solomon he (Moloch) led by fraud to build
His temple right against the temple of God,
On the opprobrious hill. Milton.

OP-PRŌ-BRI-OŪS-LY, ad. In an opprobrious manner; reproachfully; scurrilously. Shak.

OP-PRŌ-BRI-OŪS-NĒSS, n. Quality of being opprobrious; reproachfulness; scurrility.

OP-PRŌ-BRI-ŪM, n. [L. opprobrium; ob, against, and probrium, virtue.] Reproach with disdain; obloquy; contumely; disgrace; infamy.
All the reproach and opprobrium that the most inveterate rancor can invent. Scott.

Syn.—See REPROACH.

OP-PRŌ-BRY, or OP'PRO-BRY, n. Reproach; opprobrium. [It.] Sherwood.
Doomed to be the scene of black guilt,
Opprobrious more enduring. Southey.

OP-PŪGN' (op-pūn'), v. a. [L. oppugno; ob, against, and pugno, to fight; It. oppugnare; Sp. opugnar.] [1. OPPUGNED; pp. OPPUGNING, OPPUGNED.] To oppose; to attack; to assail; to resist; to combat. "The open malice of those that furiously oppugn their welfare." Barrow.

Syn.—See CONFUTE.

OP-PŪG'NAN-CY, n. Opposition. Shak. Qu. Rev.

OP-PŪG'NANT, a. Opposing; assailing; contrary; repugnant. [It.] Warburton.

OP-PŪG'NANT, n. An opponent. [It.] Coleridge.

OP-PŪG-NĀTION, n. [L. oppugnatio, an assault.] Opposition; resistance. [It.] Bp. Hall.

OP-PŪGN'ER (op-pūn'er) [op-pūn'er. W. Ja. K. Sm. W. B.; op-pūgn'er, S.; op-pūn'er, P.], n. One who oppugns or opposes. Milton.

OP-SĪM'A-THY, n. [Gr. ὀψιμα; ὀψι, late, and μακρόν, to learn.] Education begun late in life; late erudition. [It.] Illes.

OP-SĪ-ŌM'E-TER, n. [Gr. ὀψις, sight, and μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument for measuring the extent of the limits of distinct vision in different individuals, and for determining the focal lengths of lenses necessary to correct imperfections of the eye; an optometer. Brande.

OP'TA-TIVE (op'ta-tiv, S. P. J. E. F. Ja. K. Sm. W.; op'ta-tiv or op-tā-tiv, W.; op-tā-tiv, Kenrick), a. [L. optativus; opto, to wish; It. ottativo; Sp. optativo; Fr. optatif.]

1. Expressive of desire.
Nothing reacheth nearer God's actual infinity than this (as I may say) optative infinity in the soul of man. Moutagu.
2. (Gram.) Applied to a mood of the verb in Greek, which serves to express desire or wish.
"Dr. Johnson, Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Ash, Mr. Scott, Entick, Barclay, and Buchanan accent this word on the first syllable; and Dr. Kenrick, Bailey, W. Johnston, and Mr. Perry, on the second. That the last is more general, particularly in grammar schools, will be readily acknowledged; but that the first is more correct and agreeable to analogy, cannot be denied; for this word is not so naturally derived from the classical optatus as the lower Latin optativus." Walker.

OP'TA-TIVE, n. A mood of the Greek verb, expressing desire. Harvis.

† OP'TATIVE, a. In most languages, except the Greek, the optative is only expressed by prefixing to the subjunctive an adverb of wishing. London Ency.

OP'TA-TIVE-LY, ad. In an optative manner.

OP'TIC, n. An instrument or organ of sight.
Why has not man a microscope eye?
For this plain reason, man is not a fly.
Say what the use, were finer optics given,
To inspect a mite, not comprehend the heaven? Pope.

OP'TIC, a. [Gr. ὀπτικός; ὀφθαλμός, to see; ὀπτική, the eye; It. ottico; Sp. optico; Fr. optique.]

1. Pertaining to vision or sight; as, "The optic nerve."
2. Pertaining to the science of optics. "Optical writers." Stewart.

OP'TI-MISM, n. [L. optimus, the best; It. ott-

mismo; Sp. optimismo.] The doctrine that the universe, being the work of an infinitely perfect being, is the best that could be created. — the doctrine that every thing is ordered eventually for the best, or the system which regards physical and moral evil as elements in the universal order of things; so that every thing is good in relation to the whole, — all being made to promote the general good.

This doctrine, under various forms, was advocated in antiquity and during the middle ages, but has been developed, in modern times, in its highest form by Leibnitz. Fleming.

ŌP'TI-MIST, n. A believer in optimism; one who considers that every thing is for the best.

D. Stewart.

"According to Mr. Stewart, under the title of optimists are comprehended those who admit, and those who deny, the freedom of human actions and the accountability of man as a moral agent." Fleming.

ŌP'TIM-I-TY, n. [L. optimatus.] The state of being best; excellence. [R.] Bailey.

ŌP'TION (ŏp'shŭn), n. [L. optio; opto, optatus, to wish, Sp. opcion; Fr. option.]

"A Latin word lately much in use." Smart.

ŌP'US ŌP'E-RĀ'TUM. [L. the thing done.] (Theol.) A phrase applied to the administration of a religious rite or sacrament, which some suppose to be always attended with spiritual effect, irrespective of the character of the recipient. Hook.

ŌR. A termination of many English words, expressing an active signification, and usually denoting the doer of any act; as, aggressor, one who commits an aggression; translator, one who translates. — See ER.

"In many instances, and often without much or any reason for the difference, the termination or is preferred to the common English termination in er; as, instructor, collector; which is an imitation of the Latin idiom, and indispensable in the adoption of an express Latin word, as, professor, oppressor. Hence the Latin model is often preferred to indicate a specific application of the general term; e. g. a sailor is he or that which sails, but a sailor is a seaman; a director is one who directs generally, but a director is the manager of a trading company." Smart.

ŌR, conj. [Goth. auðthau, A. S. oththe; Dut. of; Ger. oder; Dan. eller; Icel. eda; Sw. eller. — A contraction of the A. S. and Old Eng. other. Barclay.] A disjunctive particle that marks an alternative, generally corresponding to either; as, "Either this or that."

"In poetry it is often used for either."

Brave though we fall, and honored if we live, Or let us glory gain or glory give. Pope.

"Or, in written instruments, is frequently construed to mean and, where such construction is necessary to effectuate the intention of the parties. It has been said that there is perhaps no word in the language of more equivocal effect than or. Hence in England it has been excluded from indictments, though it has been admitted in American practice." Burrill.

† ŌR, ad. [A. S. ær, ære, before.] Before.

Some speak or they weigh, and attempt all they consider. Letter to Queen Elizabeth.

Or ever, before ever.

Or ever the silver cord be loosed. Ecc. xii. 6

The shepherds on the lawn, Or clear the air of the dawn. Milton.

ŌR, n. [Fr., gold, from L. aurum.] (Her.) One of the metals employed in blazonry, equivalent to topaz among precious stones, and to Sol among planets; — represented in engraving by a surface sprinkled with equidistant dots. Brande.

Ō'RA, n. A money of account among the Anglo-Saxons; in Domesday Book, valued at sixteen and sometimes twenty pence. Brande.

ŌR'ACH, n. (Bot.) The popular name of several plants of the genus Atriplex. Loudon.

ŌR'A-CLE (ŏr'a-kl), n. [L. oraculum, or oraculum; oro, to speak; os, oris, the mouth; It. oracolo; Sp. oraculo; Fr. oracle.]

1. A response or revelation delivered by a heathen divinity, or by supernatural wisdom.

Henceforth oracles are ceased. Milton.

The Scriptures are the oracles of God himself. Hooker.

2. The deity or god from whom a response proceeded, or was imagined to proceed. P. Cyc.

3. The place where the responses were given.

ŌR'CHĒS-TRĀ, or ŌR-CHĒS'TRA [or'kes-tra, P. K. C. Cl. W. R. H. B. Ash, Rees, Brande; or'kēs'tra, W. Ju. Sm. Nares], n. [Gr. ὀρχήστρα; ὀρχήστρη, a dancer; ὀρχήστω, to dance; L. & It. orchestra; Sp. orquesta; Fr. orchestre.]

1. (Ant.) That part of an ancient theatre between the stage and the place assigned for the audience, being the place appropriated by the Greeks to the chorus, its evolutions, and dancing, and by the Romans to senators and other distinguished persons. W. Smith.

2. An enclosed place for musicians in a modern theatre, immediately in front of the footlights of the stage; — also a balcony or gallery for musicians in a ball-room or a concert-room. Warner. Simmonds.

3. The musicians that perform in, or that occupy, an orchestra. Todd.

4. The collective mass of instruments employed in an orchestra. Warner.

"Orchestra is accented on the first syllable by Dr. Johnson, Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Ash, Mr. Scott, Mr. Nares, Buchanan, Entick, Perry, and Barclay; and by Mr. Bailey and W. Johnston on the second; and by Dr. Kenrick on either. The first mode has not only the majority of votes in its favor, but is agreeable to the general analogy of words of three syllables, which, when not of our own formation, commonly adopt the antepenultimate accent. The exception to this rule will be found under the next word.

"Orchestra is accented on the first syllable by Dr. Ash, Mr. Scott, Mr. Perry, Entick, and Barclay; but Mr. Nares says it is accented on the second, as I have given it. For, notwithstanding the numbers against me, the very general rule is on my side; which is, that, when we adopt a word whole from the Latin or Greek, it ought to have the same accent as in those languages." Walker.

ŌR'CHĒS-TRĀL, a. Relating to, or befitting, an orchestra; orchestric. Smart.

ŌR'CHĒS-TRE (or'kes-ter. — See ORCHESTRA), n. [Fr.] A place for musicians; an orchestra. Smith.

OR-DE-AL [or'de-al, P. J. F. Ja. K. Sm.; or'dyal, S. E.; or'de-al or or'je-al, W.], n. [A. S. ordæl; Dut. ordeel; Fr. ordal; Ger. urtheil.] — Mod. L. ordalium; Sp. ordalia; Fr. ordal. — Spelman and Richardson derive the A. S. from or, great, and deæl, judgment; Lye and Bosworth, from or, priv., and deæl, separation, difference, that is, an impartial judgment.]

1. A form of trial among the ancient rude nations of Europe, to determine, by a supposed reference to the judgment of God, the guilt or the innocence of persons accused, as by exposing them to the danger of drowning in cold water, of being scalded in hot water, or of being burnt by fire or by hot iron.

Sp. In the trial by cold water, the persons suspected were thrown naked into a pond or a river; if they sank, they were acquitted, but if they floated without attempting to swim, it was taken for an evidence of guilt. When scalding water was the test, they were to plunge their arm in it to the elbow; if this was done without any signs of pain or marks of scalding, they were discharged; otherwise, they were adjudged to be guilty. In the ordal by fire, the person accused was either to hold a burning ball of iron in his hand, and move with it to a certain distance, or else to walk barefoot upon heated ploughshares, placed about a yard from each other; if, after this trial, his hands or feet were untouched, and he discovered no signs of feeling any pain, he was discharged; otherwise, he was remitted to the punishment of the law. Hook.

2. Any severe trial; test; experiment. Roget.

OR-DE-AL, a. Pertaining to the form of trial called the ordcal. "Ordeal laws." Hakewill.

OR-DE-AL, n. The right of adjudging trial by ordeal within a given liberty or precinct. Wright.

OR-DĒR, n. [L. ordo; It. ordine; Sp. orden; Fr. ordre.]

1. Regular and methodical disposition; intelligent arrangement; the harmonious relation established between the parts of any thing.

Order is Heaven's first law; and, this confessed, Some are, and must be, greater than the rest. Pope. Order is the adaptation of means to an end. Faust. Science, in all its discoveries, tends to the discovery of universal order. Fleming.

2. Established process; settled mode of operation or proceeding; regulation; rule.

The moderator, when either of the disputants breaks the rules, may interpose to keep them to order. Watts.

3. Proper state or condition; regularity. Locke.

4. Mandate; precept; command; injunction; bidding; direction; instruction.

Give order to your servants. Shal.

5. A written direction or demand addressed to a person, usually on behalf of another, as for the payment of money.

I have received an order under your hand for a thousand pounds. Taiter.

6. Regular government; discipline.

There is no church where there is no order. Pearson.

7. Degree; class; rank. "The priests of the second order." 2 Kings xxiii. 4.

To those bright orders uttered thus his voice. Milton.

8. A dignified or privileged class.

Religious orders are of three kinds: 1. Monastic; 2. Military; 3. Mendicant. Brande. Of all the orders of British knighthood, the most illustrious are the knights of the garter. Mil. Encyc.

9. Measures; care. "If any of the family be distressed, order is taken." Brande.

10. (Math.) A term of succession, arbitrarily distinguished from degree, used in the classification of algebraic magnitudes.

Sp. "An expression is of the first, second, third, &c., degree, according as its highest power is the first, second, third, &c., of the principal letter. But if another succession should occur, say one of differentiations, then the number of such successive operations is the order of the process. Thus a differential equation, which contains, at the highest, the fifth power of a differential coefficient, is said to be of the fifth degree, while, if the highest differential coefficient which occurs in it is the third, it is said to be of the third order." P. Cyc.

11. (Rhet.) The placing of words and members in a sentence, in such a manner as to contribute to force and beauty of expression, or to the clear illustration of the subject. Wright.

12. (Nat. Hist.) A group of objects subordinate to a class or a sub-class. It is, however, like many other general terms, used very loosely, especially by zoologists. In botany it is more definitely applied, and is used synonymously with family and tribe. Eng. Cyc.

13. (Arch.) A species of columnar arrangement, differing in its forms, proportions, and leading features, from any other. Hoskins.

Sp. An order, or perfect columnar composition, comprises the basement, or stylobate, with the column, and its entablature; but the Greeks sometimes substituted for the column the figure of a human being supporting the entablature. See CARYATIDES. — There are five orders of columns, three of which are Greek; viz., the Doric, Ionic, and Corinthian; and one Roman, viz., the Composite, an ornamented variety of the Corinthian, to which the Italian architects of the 15th century added another, called the Tuscan. Britton.

14. (Ecol.) The name given in England to an old work containing the ritual or religious ceremonies necessary to be performed before the ordination of a priest; an ordinal. Brande.

15. pl. (Ecol.) The position to which ministers of the Christian religion are admitted at the time of their ordination; the sacred character or profession; — often called holy orders.

The great controversy between Paphopallians and Presbyterians is, the authority by which holy orders are conferred. P. Cyc.

General orders, (Mil.) orders issued, by the general who commands, to all the officers under him. Steuqneler. — Orders of knighthood, (Her.) societies of knights instituted by princes, as marks of distinction for such as have distinguished themselves in war. The British orders are, the order of the Garter, and the order of the Bath, belonging to England; the Irish order of St. Patrick; and the Scottish order of the Thistle. Davies. — Order of the day, in legislative proceedings, a subject assigned by an order of the assembly for consideration on a particular day. Cushing. — In order to, for the purpose of, as means to. "The best knowledge is that which is of greatest use in order to our eternal happiness." Tillotson. — Orders in council, (Pol.) orders issued by the king in council for the temporary regulation of various matters relating to trade and international intercourse. Brande. — (Trade) an official announcement or new regulation by the Privy Council of the Board of Trade. Simmonds. — Pass orders, (Mil.) written directions to the sentries, &c., belonging to outposts, &c., to suffer the bearer to go through the camp or garrison unmolested. — Sailing orders, (*Nat. In ordinary, in actual and constant office or service. “Chaplain in ordinary to his majesty.” Fell.

Two persons rose very early, as was their ordinary habit. They moved in respectable life, and had their ordinaries allowed them by the Herald's College. Then means, however, were only ordinary. So far from being handsome, they were exceedingly ordinary. They were much shocked at the spectacle of an execution which they were compelled to pass, just as the ordinary of the jail was hiding farewell to the prisoners. The next scene was more pleasant, for they saw a review precisely as the legions were marching past the general in ordinary time. They finished their walk at an excellent ordinary, where was a very sumptuous entertainment.—The highest archbishop is an ordinary to his clergy. R. W. Hamilton.

ÖR'DI-NÄ-RY, or ÖRD'INÄ-RY [ör'de-nä-re, P. J. Ja. K. Sm. R.; örd'nä-re, W. E. F.; ör'ner-e, S.], n.

1. Regular price of a meal. Shak.

2. A place of eating where the prices are settled, or a regular meal established at a certain price. Swift. Wright.

† ÖR'DI-NÄTE, v. a. [L. ordinō, ordinatus.] To appoint; to ordain. Daniel.

ÖR'DI-NÄTE, a. Regular; methodical; orderly. Ordinate figures are such as have all their sides and all their angles equal. Kay.

ÖR'DI-NÄTE, n. (Geom.) The distance of any point of a curve from the axis of abscissas measured on another line called the axis of ordinates, or on a line parallel to this axis.—See ABSCISSA, and COORDINATES. Da. & P.

ÖR'DI-NÄTE-LY, ad. In a regular or methodical manner. [u.] Skelton.

Orthoepy differs from orthography by determining how words are spoken, whereas orthography decides how they are spelt. Latham.

"It is not a little surprising that so few of our dictionaries of pronunciation have inserted this word, so peculiarly appropriated to the subject they have treated. It is regularly derived from the Greek ὀρθόεπεια, and is as necessary to our language as orthography, orthodoxy, &c. Mr. Elphinstone and Mr. Nares place the accent on the first syllable of this word, as I have done." Walker.

2. Delineated according to the elevation and actual measurement without reference to the rules of perspective. Mortimer.

Orthographic projection, (Geom.) that projection in which points are projected by means of straight lines drawn through them, perpendicular to the plane of projection.

"All the projections of descriptive geometry are orthographic; also that particular kind of spherical projection called the orthographic projection. The name is almost exclusively applied in the latter case. The orthographic projection of the circles of the sphere may be regarded as the perspectives of the circle, the point of sight being at an infinite distance from the principal plane, or plane of projection, which is, in this case, the perspective plane." Davies.

ÖR'THO-GRÄPH'IC-AL-LY, ad. 1. According to the rules of spelling. Johnson.

2. According to the orthographic projection.

OUGHT (awt), n. Any thing; ought. Milton.

OUGHT (awt), r. def. 1. † I. Was bound to pay; had a right to; owed.

There was a certain lender, which ought him five hundred pence, and the other fifty. Luke vii. 41, Tindale's Trans.

This blood which men by treason ought.
That followed, sir, which to myself I ought. Dryden.

2. To be bound by duty; to be owed or obliged; to be fit or necessary; should.

I ought to write to you means, I owe the performance of writing to you, or, I should write to you.

A discourse always ought to begin with a clear proposition. Bar.

Ought was originally the pteretic tense of the verb to owe, and was used as an active verb, as in the quotations above given from Tyndale and Hyden; but this use of it is now entirely obsolete. It is now used as a neuter defective verb, having no other inflection than oughtest for the second person singular. By some grammarians it is called an auxiliary verb, but incorrectly, for it is not followed by another verb without the particle to.

Grammarians differ much respecting the tense of ought. According to Crombie, Grant, Cobbett, Arnold, Smart, &c., it is used only in the present; according to Hunter, only in the past; and according to Murray, Webster, Fowler, Brown, &c., both in the present and imperfect.

"Ought, under the name of a defective verb, is now generally thought to be properly used, in this one form, in all the persons and numbers, of the present and imperfect tense of the indicative and subjunctive mood. Or, if it is really of one tense only, it is plainly an aorist; and hence the time must be specified by the infinitive that follows; as, 'He ought to go; He ought to have gone.' 'If thou ought to go; If thou ought to have gone.' Being originally a pteretic, it never occurs in the infinitive mood, and is entirely invariable, except in the solemn style, where we find oughtest in both tenses; as, 'How thou oughtest to behave thyself?' Tim. iii. 15; 'Thou oughtest, therefore, to have put my money to the exchangers.' Matt. xxiv. 27." Gould Brown.

Syn.—Ought, according to Dr. Truster, implies the obligation of duty; should, the obligation of custom; ought being the stronger term. We should follow the fashion, and avoid giving offence. We ought to speak the truth, and to serve those who have served us.

4. Through, diffusively; throughout. "All the world over." Hammond.

5. More than; upwards of. Clarke.

Over, "Over night" is probably elliptical, implying—while I am yet over the night, or the night under me, i. e. in my power; hence it means before night." Smart.

Over, in poetry, is often contracted to o'er.

Over It has long been more or less the custom in this country to use over instead of under, in the sense of attested or signed by, as, "over his signature," instead of "under his signature." This improper use of over is noticed and censured by Mr. Pickering, in his "Vocabulary of Americanisms," published in 1816. He says, "A few of our writers still countenance this unwarrantable innovation; but the principle on which it is defended would unsettle the whole language. The use of the word under in phrases like these,—"He wrote under (not over) the signature of Junius"; "He published some papers under (not over) his own signature,"—is as well established as any English idiom."—"He has left evidence under his own hand." Locke.

This use of over for under is not yet entirely discontinued. A communication, which appeared in the "Boston Traveller," in April, 1857, thus begins: "A statement purporting to have been made over my signature."—See UNDER.

3. "A half French word, sometimes written ovety and ovealty." Cowell.

ÖW'EN-ITE, n. A follower of Robert Owen, who attempted to reorganize society. Smart.

ÖW'ING, p. & a. 1. Due as a debt. "The debt owing from one country to another." Locke.

2. Imputable to, as an agent; attributable to. The ruin of Greece was owing to the former [the custom of particular impeachments]. Swift.

3. Ascribable as an effect or consequence. His misery is owing to his carelessness. Smart.

3. "A practice has long prevailed among writers to use owing, the active participle of owe, in a passive sense, for owed or due. Of this impropriety some writers were aware, and having no quick sense of the force of English words, have used due in the sense of consequence or imputation, which by other writers is only used of debt." Johnson. — See DUE.

ÖWL, n. [A. S. ule; Dut. uil; Ger. uule; Dan. ugle; Icel. ugla; Sw. ugla and uggla. — L. ulula; Fr. hulotte. — Sansc. uluka.] — "The name appears to be formed from the howling cry of the bird." Bosworth.

1. (Ornith.) A bird of the order Accipitres, family Strigidae, or the Linnæan genus Strix. Gray.

A falcon, towering in her pride of place, Was by a mousing owl hawked at and killed. Shak.

2. Owls are distinguished by having a large head, great, projecting eyes, directed forwards and surrounded with a circle or disk of loose and delicate feathers, a strong, hooked bill, crooked claws, and a downy plumage. Their sense of hearing is very acute. They feed on birds and quadrupeds, and even fish, according to the size of the species. The geographical distribution of owls is very wide, species being found in Europe, Asia, Africa, America, and Australia. Though chiefly nocturnal, some species are able to fly and see distinctly in open day. Eng. Cyc.

2. A kind of pigeon.

The varieties of this bird [the pigeon] produced under the various build of man, the tumblers, clowns, jugglers, runts, spots, turkeys, &c., world and a volume. Eng. Cyc.

ÖWL, v. n. (Law.) To carry on a contraband or unlawful trade; to skulk about with contraband goods. Perry.

ÖWL'ER [öwl'er, S. W. P. Ja. K.; äw'er, Sm.], n. (Law.) One who is guilty of the offence of owling. Tait.

ÖWL'ET, n. [Fr. hulotte.] — See OWL. An owl.

From his dark and lonely hiding-place (From his dark and lonely hiding-place) He comes forth at night, and with his wings spread, He looks upon the world, and with his eyes he sees, And with his talons he seizes his prey, And with his beak he tears it in pieces. Coleridge.

3. "It is not the diminutive [of owl], but is often so understood." Smart.

ÖWL'ING, n. (Old Eng. Law.) The offence of transporting wool or sheep out of the kingdom.

3. "Blackstone seems to intimate that owling received its name from the time when it was usually committed, viz., the night, when owls fly; by others it is thought to be a corruption of woolwing." Richardson.

ÖWL'ISH, a. Resembling an owl; owl-like. "Thy dull, owlish sight." Observer.

ÖWL'-LIGHT (öwl'lit), n. Glimmering or feeble light. Warburton.

ÖWL'-LIKE, a. Resembling an owl; owl-like. "An owl-like watchman." Donne.

ÖWN (ōn), a. [A. S. agen; Dut. & Ger. eigen; Dan. & Sw. egen. — See OWE.] Belonging; possessed; peculiar; proper to; belonging or peculiar to me; as, "My own."

3. It is added by way of emphasis to the possessive pronouns, my, thy, his, her, our, your, their.

3. "The noun-substantive, though very frequently understood, is never of necessity considered as included in the word [own], which may therefore always be deemed an adjective." Smart.

ÖWN (ōn), v. a. [See OWE.] [i. OWNED; pp. OWNING, OWNED.]

1. To possess or hold by right; to have the right to property in.

Of Camball and of Algariffe, And who had Canace to wife, That owned the virtuous ring and glass. Milton.

2. To acknowledge; to avow; to recognize; to confess; to allow.

Others will own their weakness of understanding. Locke. Syn. — See ACKNOWLEDGE, ALLOW, RECOGNIZE.

ÖWN'ER (ōn'er), n. One to whom any thing belongs; the rightful possessor or proprietor.

The owner is he who has dominion of a thing real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal, which he has a right to enjoy and do with it what he pleases. Bouvier.

Syn. — See POSSESSOR.

ÖWN'ER-SHIP (ōn'er-shĭp), n. Rightful possession or property; the right by which a thing belongs to some one in particular to the exclusion of all other persons; proprietorship. Ayliffe.

ÖWSE, n. The bark of a young oak beaten small, and mixed with water; ooze. [E.] Crabb.

Barn owl (Strix flammea).

ÖW'SER, n. Same as OWSE, or OOEZ. Crabb.

ÖX (öks), n.; pl. ÖXEN. [Goth. aihs; A. S. oxa; Dut. os; Ger. ochs; Dan. oxe, and okse; Icel. ox; Sw. oze; Arm. os. — W. yeh. — Sansc. uksha.] (Zool.) The general designation for the different species and varieties of the ruminant quadrupeds belonging to the genus Bos; generically distinguished by having smooth, hollow, persistent horns growing on a bony core, by having the body thick and heavy, the tail long, terminated by a tuft of hair, and by four inguinal mammae. Bell.

The male of this genus is called a bull; the female, a cow; and the young, a calf. The name of ox is specifically given to the castrated male, and he is called an ox-calf or bull-calf until he is a twelve-month old, a steer until he is four years old, and after that an ox or bullock. Maunder.

ÖX-ÄQ'ID, n. (Chem.) An acid containing oxygen. Thomson.

ÖX-ÄL'A-MIDE, n. (Chem.) Oxamide. P. Cyc.

ÖX'A-LÄTE, n. [Fr.] (Chem.) A salt formed by a combination of oxalic acid with a base. Brande.

ÖX-ÄL'IC, a. [Gr. ὄξαις, sorrel; L. oxalis; Fr. oxalique, oxalic.] (Chem.) Noting an acid obtained from Oxalis or sorrel.

Oxalic acid exists in the form of an acid salt of potassa, in a great number of plants, particularly in the species of Ordis and Rumex. Combined with lime, it also forms a part of several lichens. It is composed of two equivalents of carbon and three of oxygen, and is usually prepared by the action of diluted nitric acid upon sugar. Graham.

ÖX'A-LIS, n. [Gr. ὄξαις, sorrel; ὄξαις, sharp; L. oxalis.] (Bot.) A genus of plants the leaves of which have an acid taste; sorrel. Loudon.

ÖX'ÄL-ITE, n. (Min.) A native oxalate of iron; humboldtine. Dana.

ÖX'A-LYLE, n. [Gr. ὄξαις, sharp, and ἔλη, principle.] (Chem.) The hypothetical radical of oxalic acid; carbonic oxide. Graham.

ÖX-ÄM'IC, a. [Gr. ὄξαις, sharp, and Eng. ammonia.] (Chem.) Noting an acid produced by the destructive distillation of binoxalate of ammonia. Brande.

ÖX'A-MIDE, n. [Fr.] (Chem.) Oxalate of ammonia less two equivalents of water. Dumas.

ÖX'BÄNE, n. A plant. Ainsworth.

ÖX'BIRD, n. (Ornith.) The common name of a species of sand-piper; the dunlin; Tringa variabilis. Yarrell.

ÖX'-BÖW, n. A piece of curved wood put round the neck of a draught ox, and serving as a kind of collar. Simmonds.

ÖX'EYE (öks'ti), n. 1. (Bot.) A plant of the genus Buphrasium, so called in allusion to the broad open disk of the flowers: — a plant of the genus Anthemis: — a plant of the genus Chrysanthemum, called also ox-eye daisy: — a plant of the genus Helenium; sneeze-wort; Helenium autumnale. Loudon. Eng. Cyc. Dunglison.
2. (Ornith.) A name of the larger titmouse; Parus major. Ray.

ÖX'EYED (öks'id), a. Having eyes like those of an ox; having large eyes.

The Greek is ὄξαις ὀφθαλμία Hpn, which is commonly translated the venerable ox-eyed Juno. Pope.
Homer useth that epithet of ox-eyed, in describing Juno, because a round, black eye is the best. Hutton.

ÖX'-GÄLL, n. The fluid, or bile, contained in the gall-bladder of the ox. Simmonds.

ÖX'GÄNG, n. [Ger. ochs, an ox, and gang, a walk.] (Old Eng. Law.) As much land as one ox can plough in one season, varying in amount, but commonly taken for 15 acres. Whishaw.

ÖX'-GÖAD, n. A rod with a point or goad for driving oxen. Judges iii. 31.

ÖX'-HÄR-BÖW, n. A large sort of harrow; — sometimes called a drag. Farm. Ency.

ÖX'-HÄAD, n. The head of an ox. Shak.

ÖX'HÄAL (öks'häl), n. (Bot.) A species of hellebore; bear's-foot; Helleborus foetidus. Ainsworth.

ÖX'-HIDE, n. 1. The hide of an ox; the dried or the tanned skin of the ox.

2. A measure of land, being as much as could be encircled by narrow strips cut from a single hide. Gent. Mag.

ÖX'HÖÖF, n. (Bot.) The leaves of species of Caulotretus and Bauhinia, sometimes used as mucilaginous remedies. Eng. Cyc.

ÖX-J-DA-BIL'I-TY, n. [Fr. oxydabilité.] Capability of being converted into an oxide. Wright.

ÖX-J-DA-BLE, a. [It. ossidabile; Fr. oxydable.] That may be oxidized; oxidizable. Phil. Mag.

ÖX'-DÄTE, v. a. & n. [It. ossidare; Sp. oxidar; Fr. oxyder.] [i. OXIDATED; pp. OXIDATING, OXIDATED.] To convert into an oxide; to combine with oxygen; to oxidize. Ure.

ÖX-J-DÄ'TION, n. [It. ossidazione; Sp. oxidacion; Fr. oxydation.] The act of oxidizing or combining with oxygen; the process of converting metals or other substances into oxides, by combining with them a certain portion of oxygen; oxidizement; oxygenation.

"It differs from acidification in the addition of oxygen not being sufficient to form an acid with the substance oxidized." Hoblyn.

ÖX'-DÄ-TOR, n. A contrivance to throw an external current of air upon the flame of an argand lamp; an oxygenator. W. Ency.

ÖX'IDE, n. [Gr. ὄξαις, sharp. — It. ossido; Sp. oxido; Fr. oxyde.] (Chem.) A substance combined with oxygen without being in the state of an acid; a combination, not acid, of a simple body with oxygen. Ure.

The metallic oxides are a most important class of bodies. The first, second, third, &c., oxides of one base are designated by the terms protoxide, deutoxide, trioxide, &c.; and when the base, without becoming acid, is saturated with oxygen, it is termed a peroxide. Brande.

This word, and others of the same family, are by some written with a y, as oxyde, or oxyd, oxydate, &c.; and this orthography is in accordance with etymology. Yet the orthography of oxide, oxidate, &c., is that of the English scientific dictionaries, encyclopaedias, &c., and seems to be established by common usage, especially in chemical and scientific works. Smart says, "Oxyde is etymologically correct, but the other form (oxide, &c.) exhibits the scientific termination by which compounds are distinguished that possess no sensible properties of acids, and are supporters of combustion."

ÖX-ID-IZ'A-BLE, a. That may be oxidized; oxidizable. Brande.

ÖX-ID-IZE, v. a. [i. OXIDIZED; pp. OXIDIZING, OXIDIZED.] To change to the state of an oxide; to combine with oxygen; to oxidate. Brande.

ÖX-ID-IZE-MENT, n. The act of oxidizing; oxidation; oxidation. Henry.

ÖX-I-ÖD'IC, a. Relating to, or consisting of, a compound of oxygen and iodine. Brande.

ÖX'-LIKE, a. Resembling the ox. Booth.

ÖX'LIP, n. [A. S. oxan-slippa.] (Bot.) A kind of primrose; Primula elatior.

I know a bank whereon the wild thyme blows,
Where the oxlip and the nodding violet grows. Shak.

So called from some likeness in the flowers to the lips of the ox, or from the grateful scent of the flowers. Shanner.

ÖX-ÖN'I-AN, n. 1. A member, or a graduate, of the University of Oxford, in England. Qu. Rev.

2. A kind of shoe worn by men. Simmonds.

ÖX'PÖCK-ER, n. (Ornith.) A bird of the family Buphaginae, or beef-eaters. Suainson.

ÖX'-STÄLL, n. A stand or stall for oxen.

ÖX'TER, n. [A. S. oxta. — L. axilla.] The armpit. [North of England.] Brockett.

ÖX'TÖNGUE (öks'täng), n. (Bot.) 1. A kind of plant covered with strong prickles; Helminthia echinoides. Eng. Cyc.

2. A plant of the genus Picris. Loudon.

3. A plant of the genus Anchusa; bugloss. Wood.

ÖX-Y-ÖHLÖ'RIC, a. (Chem.) Noting an acid obtained from chlorate of potassa, and called also perchloric and hyperchloric acid. Graham.

ÖX-Y-CRÄTE, n. [Gr. ὄξαις, sharp, and κραταιά, to mix; It. ossierato; Fr. oxyerat.] A mixture of water and vinegar. Wiseinan.

ÖX-Y-GËN, n. [Gr. ὄξαις, sharp, and γεννάω, to generate; "i. e. generator of acids, and such it was believed to be exclusively, at the period when the name was given to it." Dunglison. — It. ossigeno; Sp. oxigeno; Fr. oxygene.]

1. (Chem.) A colorless, inodorless, tasteless, and non-metallic elementary body.

Oxygen is a permanent gas, when uncombined, and forms one fifth part of the air of the atmosphere. In a state of combination, this element is the most extensively diffused body in nature, entering as a constituent into water, into nearly all the earths and rocks of which the crust of the globe is composed, and into almost all organic products. Many of its compounds are acids, — whence the name oxygen, given to it by Lavoisier, — but it unites in preference with single equivalents of a large proportion of the metallic class of elements, and forms bodies which are alkaline, or have the character of bases. Some of its compounds are neither acid nor alkaline, and are therefore called neutral bodies. Oxygen was discovered by Dr. Priestley in 1774, and about a year afterwards by Scheele, in Sweden, without any knowledge of Priestley's experiments. It was at first called dephlogisticated air, because it is non-inflammable, empyreic air, because it supports combustion, and vital air, because it is necessary to respiration. Graham.

"The word oxygen is too deeply rooted in scientific nomenclature to be safely removed; but it may be taken as a remarkable instance of an aluding word which changed its original meaning within a comparatively short period after its introduction." Tomlinson.

2. A manufacturing name for bleaching-powder. Simmonds.

ÖX-Y-GËN-ÄTE, v. a. [It. ossigenare; Sp. oxigenar; Fr. oxygéner.] To combine or impregnate with oxygen; to oxygenize. Brande.

ÖX-Y-GËN-ÄT-ED, p. a. Combined with oxygen.

ÖX-Y-GËN-Ä'TION, n. [It. ossigenazione; Sp. oxigenacion; Fr. oxygénation.] The act of oxygenating or combining with oxygen.

"A term often used as synonymous with oxidation; it differs, however, from it in being of more general import, every union with oxygen being an oxygenation; whereas oxidation takes place only when an oxide is formed." Hoblyn.

ÖX-Y-GËN-Ä-TOR, n. A contrivance for throwing a current of air on the flame of an argand lamp; an oxidator. Simmonds.

ÖX-Y-GËN-IZ'A-BLE, a. That may be oxygenized, or oxygenated. Wright.

ÖX-Y-GËN-IZE, v. a. [i. OXYGENIZED; pp. OXYGENIZING, OXYGENIZED.] To impregnate or combine with oxygen; to oxygenate. P. Cyc.

ÖX-Y-GËN-IZE-MENT, n. Oxygenation. Wright.

ÖX-Y-G'Ë-NOÜS, a. Relating to, or containing, oxygen. Brande.

ÖX-Y-GÖN, n. [Gr. ὄξαις, sharp, and γωνία, an angle; Sp. oxigonio; Fr. oxygone.] (Geom.) A triangle having three acute angles; an acute-angled triangle. Davies & Peck.

ÖX-Y-G'Q-NÄL, a. Having three acute angles; acute-angled. Francis.

ÖX-Y-GÖN'I-ÄL, a. Oxygonal. Maunder.

ÖX-Y-ILY'DRÖ-GËN, n. 1. (Chem.) A name given to a kind of blow-pipe by which a stream of lighted hydrogen, as it escapes from a nozzle, is supplied with pure oxygen, thus producing an intense heat. Hoblyn.

2. (Opt.) A kind of microscope, which has now almost entirely superseded the solar microscope; — so called because the illumination, instead of being produced by the sun's rays, is produced by burning a small piece of lime or marble in a stream of oxyhydrogen gas. Brande.

ÖX-Y-MËL, n. [Gr. ὄξαις, sharp, and μέλι, honey; L. oxymeli; It. ossimele; Sp. ojimel; Fr. oxymel.] A mixture of vinegar and honey boiled to a sirupy consistence. Arbuthnot.

ÖX-Y-MÖ'RON, n. [Gr. ὄξαις, sharp, and μωρός, foolish.] (Rhet.) A figure by which words or phrases of contrary signification are united, thus producing a seeming contradiction; as, "Cruel kindness"; "Laborious idleness." Andrews.

W. Brande, Catherwood. n. [Arab. basha; Turk. pasha. Buckton.—Some derive pacha from Per. pa shah, the foot of the king; others from pad, a guardian, and shah, king. P. Cye.] (Turkish Empire.) Originally, the title given to a minister, or chief assistant of the sultan, whether military or learned.—now applied exclusively to the governor of a province;—sometimes written pasha, pashaw, and bashaw.

The well-known distinction of ranks between the two classes of pachas consists in the number of horse-tails which are carried before them as standards, the higher having three, and the lower two. Brande.

PACH-A-CÁ'MAC, n. The divinity worshipped by the ancient Peruvians as the creator of the universe;—so named from the valley of Pachacama, where a magnificent temple was erected to his honor. Brande.

PA-CHÁ'LIQ [pa-shá'lik, Sm. R. C. B. Wb.; pa-shá'lik, K. Wb.; pa-shá'lik, Maunder], n. The province or jurisdiction of a pacha. [Turkey.] Walsh.

PACH-Y-CÉPH'A-LÁ, n. pl. [Gr. παχὺς, thick, and κεφαλή, the head.] (Geol.) A tribe of Entomostroaca, having the head broad and shield-shaped. Baird.

PACH-Y-CÉPH'A-LÍ'N-Æ, n. pl. [Gr. παχὺς, thick, and κεφαλή, the head.] (Ornith.) A sub-family of denitrostrual birds of the order Passeres and family Ampeleidae; thick heads. Gray.

Pteruthius erythropterus.

PACH-Y-CÓR'MUS, n. [Gr. παχὺς, thick, and κορμός, the trunk of a tree.] (Pál.) A genus of homocercal, ganoid, fossil fishes having a very thick body. Agassiz.

PACH-Y-DÁCTY-LOŪS, a. [Gr. παχὺς, thick, and δάκτυλος, a finger.] Thick-toed. Hitchcock.

PACH-Y-DERM, n. [Gr. παχὺς, thick-skinned; παχὺς, thick, and δέρμα, skin.] (Zool.) One of the Pachydermata. Kirby.

PACH-Y-DÉR'MA-TÁ, n. pl. (Zool.) An order of mammals, distinguished for the thickness of their skins, including all the hoofed quadrupeds which do not ruminate, as the elephant, rhinoceros, horse, hog, &c. Brande.

PACH-Y-DÉR'MA-TOŪS, a. (Zool.) Having a thick skin; belonging to the Pachydermata. Lyell.

PACH-Y-ÓTE, n. [Gr. παχὺς, thick, and ὄτος, the ear.] (Zool.) One of a family of bats which have thick external ears. Brande.

PA-CHY-P'TE-RÍS, n. [Gr. παχὺς, thick, and πτερίς, a fern with feathery leaves; πτερόν, a feather.] (Pál.) A genus of fossil ferns. Eng. Cye.

PA-CÍF'IC, a. [L. pacificus; pax, peace, and facio, to make; It. & Sp. pacifico; Fr. pacifique.]

1. Making or promoting peace; conciliatory; mild; appeasing; as, "Pacific measures."
2. Peaceful; peaceable; gentle; tranquil; calm. "In my long life and pacific prosperity." Hall.

Syn.—Pacific signifies making, or disposed to make, peace; peaceable, disposed to be at peace, and free from war or contest; peaceful, being at peace, or free from agitation. Pacific measures; peaceable disposition; peaceful cottage; peaceful life; mild or gentle disposition; conciliatory measure.—See GENTLE.

PA-CÍF'I-CÁ-BLE, a. That may be pacified. Hall.

PA-CÍF'I-CAL, a. Pacific. [R.] Wotton.

PA-CÍF'I-CAL-LY, ad. In a pacific manner. [R.]

PAC-I-FI-CÁ'TION, or PA-CÍF-I-CÁ'TION [pás-e-fé-ká'shun, W. P. J. F.; pá-sif-e-ká'shun, J. K. Sm. R. Wb.], n. [L. pacificatio; It. pacificazione; Sp. pacificación; Fr. pacification.] The act of pacifying; reconciliation; adjustment. "An embassy of pacification." Bacon. "A pacification of wrath." Hooker.

PAC-I-FI-CÁ'TOR, or PA-CÍF-I-CÁ-TOR [pás-e-fé-ká'tur, W. P. J. F.; pá-sif-e-ká'tur, J. K. Sm. R.], n. [L. pacificator, to pacify.] One who makes or restores peace between contending parties; a peacemaker. Warburton.

PA-CÍF'I-CÁ-TQ-RY, a. [L. pacificatorius.] Tending to make peace; peace-making. "Pacificatory . . . epistles." Barrow.

PÁC'[-PÍ-ÉR, n. One who pacifies. Bailey.

PÁC'[-FÝ, v. a. [L. pacifico; pax, peace, and facio, to make; It. pacificare; Sp. pacificar; Fr. pacifier.] [i. PACIFIED; pp. PACIFYING, PACIFIED.]

1. To give or restore peace to; to conciliate. He went on as far as York, to pacify and settle those countries. Deacon.

2. To appease; to calm; to still; to quiet; to tranquilize;—used of persons and things. But he will not now be pacified; Fabian can scarce hold him yonder. Shak.

Then was the king's wrath pacified. Esth. vii. 10.

Syn.—See APPEASE, CONCILIATE.

PÁC'ING, v. a. Moving with a pace; as, "A pacifying horse."

PÁCK, n. [Dut. pak; Ger. pack; Dan. pakke; Sw. pack, packe; Gael. pac.—It. pacco; Sp. & Port. paquete, a packet; Fr. paquet, a packet.] 1. A bundle tied up or lashed for carriage or transportation; as "A pedler's pack."

2. A pack of flour, or Indian corn-meal, flax, &c., weighs 250 lbs.; of wool, 240 lbs. net. Simmonds.

3. A load; a burden. "Heap on your head a pack of sorrows." Shak.

4. A great number; as, "A pack of troubles." Johnson.—Vulgarly corrupted into "A peck of troubles." Smart.

A pack of blessings lights upon thy back. Shak.

5. A complete assortment of playing cards. Shuffling and dividing a pack of cards. Addison.

6. A number of hounds kept together and hunting in company. The fiery fires the pack; they snuff, they vent, And feed their hungry nostrils with the scent. Dryden.

7. A number of persons confederated, as in some bad design or practice; a crew; a gang. "A pack of knaves and villains." Clarendon. I'll be revenged on the whole pack of you. Shak.

8. A term of reproach; an impostor. "An arrant naughty pack." Chapman.

9. An agreement; a pact. North.

PÁCK, v. a. [Dut. pakken; Ger. packen; Dan. pakke; Sw. packa.—From A. S. pæcan, to deceive. Tooke.—"It is probable that some verb, whence the Dut., Ger., Dan., Sw., and Eng. have descended, existed in the A. S., meaning, as those [verbs] do, to put together, to bind or fasten up together; and that the false appearances which caused the deception were effected by the manner in which the package was performed." Richardson.] [i. PACKED; pp. PACKING, PACKED.]

1. To bind or lash together in a pack; to form into a pack;—often used with up; as, "To pack wool"; "To pack up rags."

2. To put and press tightly, or in close order, in a receptacle; as, "To pack goods in a box."

We greatly doubt whether any human being ever succeeded in packing more wickedness into the space of three hundred and sixty-five days (than Bureo). Macaulay.

3. To put and press things into tightly, or in close order; as, "To pack a trunk."

4. To put a pack upon; to load, as with a pack. "And yet our horse not packed." Shak.

5. To put together or sort, as cards, fraudulently, or so as to secure the game unfairly. She, Eros, Packed cards with Cæsar, and false played my glory. Shak.

6. To bring together and unite, as persons, iniquitously, in order by their means to secure some partial or bad end. "They have packed a Parliament." Hudibras.

A packed assembly of Italian Bishops. Atterbury.

7. To confederate, as in some bad design; to make an accomplice. Margaret, Who, I believe, was packed in all this wrong, Hired to it by your brother. Shak.

8. To send in haste. He cannot live, I hope, and must not die Till George be packed with post-horse up to heaven. Shak.

PÁCK, v. n. 1. To tie up goods or place them in close order in a receptacle. Clearland.

2. To be pressed into some receptacle; as, "The goods packed well." Sm. Wt.

3. To depart or remove in haste;—commonly with off or away. "Poor Stella must pack off to town." Swift.

That, sir, which serves and seeks for gain,

And follows but for form,

Will pack when it begins to rain,

And leave thee in the storm. Shak.

[Low L. pagius; It. paggio; Sp. & Fr. page. — Of uncertain origin. — Skinner, Stephens, and Dicz refer to Gr. παῖς, a boy, a servant. — Caseneuve and Turnèbe, to L. pagagogium, a place where boys of servile birth were educated for pages; from Gr. παιδαγωγός, a school-room or school-house. — Bozhorvius, to bagoes, among the Persians and Macedonians, an attendant on foot of the king. — Wachter, to Sw. pojke, a little boy. — Tooke says that pack, patch, and page are the same word; viz., the past part, pac (differently pronounced and written with k, ch, or ge), of A. S. pæcan, to deceive by false appearances, to impose upon, and adds, "As servants were contemptuously called harlot, varlet, ralet, and knave, so they were called pack, patch, and page." To show that the office was not originally one of honor, he adduces the following passages: "The kingly hath power and freedom of a page to make a yoman, of a yoman to make a gentylman, of a gentylman a knight." Dives and Pauper. "I had rather be torne with wild horses, than any varlet should have wonne such lots, or any page or pricker should have had the price [prize] of me." History of Prince Arthur.

PĀGE, v. a. [i. PAGED; pp. PAGING, PAGED.]
1. To mark or number the pages of. "To page a book." Johnson.
2. To attend as a page. Shak.

PĀG'EANT, or PĀ'GĒANT (pā'ent, S. W. J. F. K. Sm. C. Wr.; pā'ent, P. E. R. Wb.; pā'g-ant or pā'g-ent, Ja.) n. [Of uncertain etymology. — Tooke says it is merely the pres. part., pæccand, of A. S. pæccan, to deceive by false appearances, or by imitation; and he traces the changes thus: pæccand, pacheand, pacheant, pagant]

1. Originally, a showy or splendid representation or exhibition in the public streets, on some festive occasion, and containing, among other objects, masked figures representing allegorical personages, with appropriate scenery:—any show, or spectacle of entertainment; pomp.

I'll play my part in future's pageant. Shak.
The reign of Henry VIII. was fertile in pageants of an extraordinary magnificence and splendor. Brande.

2. A statue or any pompous decoration in a show; an allegorical figure or representation.

The following pageant, . . . a huge floating mountain, that was split in the top, in imitation of Parnassus. Addison.

3. Any thing showy, but without duration or stability. "The . . . pageant of a day." Pope.

Speaking pageant, a pageant in which speeches in verse or prose were put into the mouths of masked figures, and sometimes a kind of dramatic entertainment performed between them.

The earliest speaking pageant of which we have any account was presented on the triumphal entry of Henry VI. into London, in 1432. Brande.

"Mr. Perry, Buchanan, and Entick pronounce the a in the first syllable long, like that in page; but Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Nares make it short, as in paid. That the first is more analogous is evident, as the accented a is succeeded by the diphthong ea; but that the last is more agreeable to general usage, I have not the least doubt. The same reason holds good for the first a in pageantry; but usage is still more decidedly for the short sound of the a in this word than in pageant. Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Perry, and W. Johnston adopt the short sound, and Entick alone the long one. About forty years ago [about 1760], when Mr. Garrick exhibited a show in honor of Shakspeare, it was universally called a pageant." Walker.

PĀR'LĪA-MĒNT (pār'lē-mēnt), n. [Low L. parlamentum; It. & Sp. parlamento; Fr. parlement; parler, to speak. — See PARLEY, v.] Originally, a meeting or assembly of persons for conference or deliberation: — now applied distinctively to the supreme legislative assembly of Great Britain and Ireland, consisting of the Sovereign, the House of Lords, and the House of Commons; — but it is commonly used for the two houses, without including the Sovereign.

The great councils were first called Parliaments in the beginning of the reign of Henry III. Hume.

"It was . . . an ancient custom, in several of the western kingdoms of Europe, for such potentates [sovereigns and great feudatories] to hold assemblies for their barons at the great festivals of the year termed cours plenières and parlemens; principally, however, if not entirely, for the mere purpose of show and magnificence. But occasionally such special assemblies were summoned for more important purposes; and the meeting in 1146, at which the crusade of St. Louis was undertaken, is said to furnish the first occasion on which the word parliament is used for a deliberative assembly. In France, however, the word was afterwards transferred to signify the principal judicial courts in that country. The only realms in which it appears to have become appropriated to the great legislative assemblies are England, Scotland, and the Norman kingdom in Sicily, [and Ireland, Canada, and Sweden, in which latter country the assembly is also called det]." Brande.

PĀS-QUIN-ĀDE', n. [It. pasquinata; Sp. pasquinada; Fr. pasquinade.] A satirical writing; a placard containing sarcasm or invective; a lampoon; a personal satire.

A mutilated statue of an ancient gladiator, dug up at Rome, about 300 years ago, and now lying in the court of the Capitol, was popularly called by the Romans Pasquino, or Pasquin, from the name of a barber or collier, remarkable for his sneers and gibes, opposite to whose house it was originally set up. To this statue it was the custom to affix satirical placards reflecting on the court and church of Rome; and it is still the occasional receptacle of jocose comments on private matters. Hence pasquinata and pasquillo have become, in Italy, conventional words to signify satirical writings, and have been naturalized in other languages. In French and German they have been used in the legal vocabulary for libel. Brande.

Syn. — See SATIRE.

passed himself off as a bishop, on a rude tribe of Scots." Macaulay. — To pass over, to omit; to let go unnoticed or unregarded; to overlook; to disregard. "It is his glory to pass over a transgression." Prov. xiv. 11.

Most of the senses attributed to the verb pass are senses, not of the verb, but of the context; or they arise out of ellipses of words formerly used with the verb. Among the particles used with the verb are out, by, over, away, from, in, to, through, &c., with each of which a correspondent meaning is formed. By the omission of the particle, or of some word formerly employed, the verb often acquires the meaning of the whole context. Thus to pass simply has come to signify to pass away, to pass bounds, to pass a sentence, &c. So, to pass a place is to pass by a place; to pass a river is to pass over a river, — the neuter verb in this manner frequently becoming, or appearing, active; to pass life is to pass on in life, or through it; to pass in fencing is to make the sword pass the adversary's; to pass an account is to place it from under examination as being correct. In old authors, to pass is sometimes used for to surpass, which is, literally, to be above or superior while in progress. In saying, an event comes to pass, we mean that it comes to us in the order of time, and then passes by as an event completed. Smart.

PĒD'Ī-ĒR, n. [Of uncertain etymology. — Minshew derives this word from Fr. aller à pied, to go on foot; Skinner, from Teut. betteler, a beggar; Johnson, from petty dealer; others, from Fr. piéd poudreux, dusty foot.—L. pedester, going on foot.—Cotgrave defines pedlar (porte-panier), a basket-carrier. The Scotch for pedlar is pedder, one who carries a ped, or basket; a travelling merchant.—See PEDDLE.] One who peddles; one who travels about the country carrying commodities for sale;—written also peddler, and pedlar.

A pedlar's pack that bows the bearer down. Couper.

This word is spelt pedlar in the old English dictionaries of Cotgrave, Coles, Martin, and Dyche; and pedler in almost all the other English dictionaries. If regularly formed as a verbal noun from the verb to peddle, the proper orthography would be peddler; but the noun pedlar or pedler appears to have been in use much longer than the verb to peddle, and this fact accounts for the apparent inconsistency in the orthography:—peddle not being found in the English dictionaries which were published before that of Johnson; and Johnson gives it only as another orthography of the verb to peddle.

PĒD'Ī-ĒR-ĒSS, n. A female pedler. Overbury.

Plinks and maces bloom,
And every bramble sheds perfume. Gay.

2. A substance that emits a sweet odor.

The room where a perfume is burnt. Digby.

¶ Fenning, Perry, Entick, Dr. Johnson, Buchanan, W. Johnston, and Kenrick place the accent on the last syllable of this word, either when a substantive or a verb. As a substantive, Scott places the accent either on the first or last, and Sheridan on the first. Mr. Nares has shown at large that the poets accent the substantive both ways. But the analogy of dissyllable nouns and verbs seems now to have fixed the accent of the substantive on the first, and that of the verb on the last." Walker.

Smart says, "The present colloquial use is in favor of accenting the second syllable."

Syn.—See SMELL.

PER-FÚME', v. a. [It. profumare; Sp. perfumar; Fr. parfumer.] [i. PERFUMED; pp. PERFUMING, PERFUMED.] To fill or impregnate with a sweet odor or scent; to scent.

2. Pertaining to a work done with the sole purpose of getting through it. Bentley.

3. Slight; careless; negligent; indifferent.

A slight and perfunctory examination of things leads men into considerable mistakes. Woodward.

¶ "I have differed from Mr. Sheridan and W. Johnston, who accent this word on the first syllable; but have Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, Mr. Nares, Barclay, Fenning, Bailey, Buchanan, and Entick on my side for accenting the second; and this pronunciation, without any authority, would be more eligible than the other, from the difficulty of pronouncing the un-combinable consonants in the last syllables without the assistance of accent, especially when we consider that the adverb perfunctorily and the possible abstract noun perfunctoriness must necessarily have the same accent as the adjective." Walker.

PER-FÚNC'TU-RÁTE, v. a. To perform perfunctorily or in an indifferent manner. N. Brit. Rev.

PER-FÚSE', v. a. [L. perfundo, perfusus; per, through, and fundo, to pour.] To pour through; to permeate; to tincture. [R.] Harvey.

†PER-SĒV'ER, v. n. To persevere;—so spelt and accented frequently by Shakespeare as well as by Spenser.—See PERSEVERANCE.

Be lusty, free, persevere in thy service. Chaucer.

PĒR-SĒ-VER'ANCE, n. [L. perseverantia; It. perseveranza; Sp. perseverancia; Fr. persévérance.]

1. The act of persevering; persistence in a design or an undertaking; continuance in action; steadiness in pursuit; constancy.

Patience and perseverance overcome the greatest difficulties. S. Richardson.

2. †Power to distinguish; perception. Harrington.

3. (Theol.) Continuance in a state of grace;—sometimes termed final perseverance. Hammond.

Syn.—Perseverance, constancy, and steadiness are used in a good sense; persistence may be used in a good sense when it means steadiness. Perseverance in a right course, constancy of affection; steadiness in the pursuit of an object; persistence in a demand.—See CONTINUE, PATIENCE.

PĒR-SĒ-VER'ANT, a. [Fr. persévérant.] Persevering. [R.] Whitby.

†PĒR-SĒ-VER'ANT-LY, ad. Perseveringly; with constancy. Spiritual Conquest.

PĒR-SĒ-VĒRE', v. n. [L. persevero, perseveratum; perseverus, very strict; per, used intensively, and severus, strict; It. perseverare; Sp. perseverar; Fr. persévérer.] [i. PERSEVERED; pp PERSEVERING, PERSEVERED.] To persist or continue rigidly or steadily in any business or undertaking; to pursue steadfastly any design or attempt; not to give up or abandon any thing begun or undertaken; to go on; to pursue.

To persevere in any evil course makes you unhappy in this life. Bake.

Mr. Nares observes that this word was anciently written persever, and accented on the second syllable; Sav. for etymology.

My name is persever. Ill's Well, &c., Act iv.

'Persever not, but hear me, mighty kings.' King John, Act ii.

'But in her pride she doth persever still.' Spenser.

But before the time of Milton, the spelling and accentuation had been changed.

'Whence heavy persecution shall arise Of all who in the worship persevere Of spirit and truth' Par. Lost, xii. v. 582.

As this word is written at present, there can be no doubt of its pronunciation; and that it is very properly written so, appears from other words of the same form—declare, respire, explore, procure, &c., from declaro, respiro, exploro, procuro, &c.; and consequently from persevero ought to be formed persevere.

Not one of our orthoepists places the accent on the second syllable; yet, such is the force of prescription, that the old pronunciation is not entirely rooted out, especially in Ireland, where this pronunciation is still prevalent. Walker.

PĒR-SĒ-VĒR'ING, p. a. Persisting; constant.

PĒR-SĒ-VĒR'ING-LY, ad. With perseverance.

2. †The parson or rector of a parish. Holmshead.

3. A being possessed of personality; an intelligent being; a man, a woman, or a child.

We must consider what person stands for, which, I think, is a thinking, intelligent being. Locke.

4. A human being; an individual; a man; one.

Be a person's attainments ever so great, he should always remember that he is God's creature. S. Richardson.

5. The body; bodily or corporal substance.

'Tis in her heart alone that you must reign; You'll find her person difficult to gain. Dryden.

6. (Gram.) The character which a noun or a pronoun bears, as denoting the speaker, the person spoken to, or the person spoken of.

Artificial person, (Law.) a corporation. Bouvier.—In person, not by a representative; himself or one's self with bodily presence. "The king in person visits all around." Dryden.

As the o in person is sunk, as in season, treason, &c., so this word, being a compound of our own, and personage coming to us from the French, we generally suppress the o, but, as personal, personate, &c., come to us from the Latin, we generally preserve the o. This is the best reason I can give for the slight difference we find in the pronunciation of these words; and, if any one is inclined to think we ought to preserve the o distinctly in all of them except person, and even in this on solemn occasions, I have not the least objection." Walker.

† PÉR'SON, v. a. To personate. Milton.

PÉR'SON-A-BLE, a. 1. Having a beautiful person or body; handsome; graceful. "Scmiramis, who was very personable." Raleigh.

2. A view through; a vista; a prospect.

3. (Fine Arts.) The art of representing or delineating on a plane surface near and distant objects, as they appear to the eye from any given distance or situation. Brande.

¶ In the figure, H H represents the horizon. The point O, exactly opposite the eye, is the centre of the picture. To this point all the horizontal lines, E O, G O, H O, I O, J O, A O, B O, &c., tend, and are called vanishing lines. The line connecting the centre of the picture and the eye is called the principal visual ray; and its length is the distance of the picture. The surface upon which the objects in the picture stand is called the ground plane, and the surface on which they are delineated is called the perspective plane.

4. A representation or picture of objects in perspective. Wright.

Aerial perspective, the faintness of outlines and blending of colors produced by the thicker or thinner stratum of air which pervades the optical image viewed. Fairholt.—Isometrical perspective, a kind of orthographic projection in which but a single plane of projection is used; isometrical projection. In this kind of perspective, the objects are represented at a particular angle, so as to show at the same time three contiguous sides, as is seen in the figures represented by isometrical perspective in the margin.—See ISOMETRICAL. Da. & P.

—Linear perspective, the art of delineating solid bodies on a plane surface, as they appear to the eye from any point. Fairholt.—Oblique perspective, perspective in which the perspective plane is taken obliquely to the principal face of the object.—Parallel perspective, perspective in which the perspective plane is taken parallel to the principal face of the object. Dana.

¶ "This word, as may be seen in Johnson, was generally accented by the poets on the first syllable; but the harshness of this pronunciation has prevented it from gaining any ground in prose." Walker.

PLAID (plād) [plād, S.W. P. J. E. F. Ja. Sm. R. C. Wr.; plād or plād, K.], n. [M. Goth. plāt. — W. plaid, part or party; pleth, a fold; Gael. plaidie.] A striped or variegated cloth, much worn by the Highlanders of Scotland, forming a predominant part of the national costume, and indicating, by the variety of its patterns, the different Scottish clans. It is worn by both sexes, and by others besides the Highlanders.

Their breacan, or plaid, consists of twelve or thirteen yards of narrow stuff, wrapt round the middle, and reaches to the knees. Pennant.

The women also wear a plaid, but it is so narrow as seldom to come below the waist. Jameson.

“It seems doubtful,” says Dr. Jamieson, “if this be properly a Gaelic word, as it does not occur in the other Celtic dialects; unless we view it as the same with the Welsh pleth, plica, a fold. The ingenious editor of ‘Popular Ballads’ says (in Glossary), ‘The word in the Gaelic and in every other language of which I have any knowledge, means any thing broad and flat; and when applied to a plaid or blanket, signifies simply a broad, plain, unfringed piece of cloth.’” — In the Gaelic dictionaries of Shaw and of Armstrong, plaidie is given as a Gaelic word, and is thus defined, “a blanket, a plaid.”

With respect to the pronunciation of this word, Ogilvie says, “Plaid is usually pronounced, and often written, plad [plād] in England”; and it is so pronounced by the English orthoepists. Lord Byron, however, makes it rhyme with glade, and he says, “This word is erroneously pronounced plad [plād]; the proper pronunciation (according to the Scotch) is known by the orthography.”

My cap was the bonnet, my cloak was the plaid. As daily I strode through the pine-covered glade. Byron.

† PLAİNT'FUL, a. Complaining; plaintive.

But, alas! to what a sea of miseries my plaintful tongue doth lead me! Sidney.

PLAİNT'IFF [plān'tif, W. P. J. F. Ja. K. Sm. R. C. Wr.; plān'tif, Kenrick, Scott], n. [Old Fr. pleyn-tif; Fr. plaintif, complaining; plaindre, to complain.] (Law.) One who, in a personal action, commences a suit, or seeks a remedy for an injury to his rights; — opposed to defendant.

Plaintiff in error, a party who sues out a writ of error, and this whether in the court below he was plaintiff or defendant. Bourcier.

“The word was universally, till of late years, pronounced with the first syllable like plan, as appears by its being adopted by Mr. Scott, Mr. Elphinstone, Mr. Perry, W. Johnston, and Dr. Kenrick; but a laudable desire of reforming the language has restored the diphthong to its true sound; and the first syllable of this word, like plane, is now the current pronunciation of all our courts of justice. Mr. Sheridan and Entick agree in this pronunciation.” Walker.

† PLAİNT'IFF, a. Complaining; plaintive. Prior.

PLAİNT'IVE, a. [Fr. plaintif; plaindre, to complain.] Complaining; querulous; lamenting; expressive of sorrow; sorrowful; mournful; sad. “A softer and more plaintive tone.” Bustace.

Syn. — See QUERULOUS.

PLAİNT'IVE-LY, ad. In a manner expressing grief or sorrow; sorrowfully. Smart.

PLAİNT'IVE-NÉSS, n. Quality of being plaintive.

PLAİNT'LESS, a. Without plaint or complaint; unrepining. [R.] Savage.

PLAİN'-WORK (plān'wûrk), n. Work not difficult: — common needle work, as distinguished from embroidery.

PLAİT (plāt), n. [W. pleth; Gael. pleat.]

1. A fold; a double, as of cloth; a plicature.

‘Tis as it sits on thee, not a plait altered. Middleton.

2. A braid, as of hair. Craig.

PLAİT, v. a. [Gr. πλέω; L. plido; It. piegare; Sp. plegar; Fr. plier. — Dan. flette; Sw. flutta. — W. plethru.] [i. PLAİTED; pp. PLAİTING, PLAİTED.]

1. To fold; to double.

Will she, on Sunday morn, thy neckcloth plait? Gay.

2. To weave; to braid; to plait; to mat.

I'll weave her garlands, and I'll plait her hair. Prior.

3. To entangle; to involve. [R.] Shak.

“There is a corrupt pronunciation of this word, as if written plete, which must carefully be avoided.” Walker. — “Often wrongly pronounced plēt.” Smart. — A vulgar pronunciation in the U. S.

PLAİT'ÉR, n. One who plaits. Johnson.

PLAİK'-DİNE, n. [Gr. πλάξ, πλακός, a plate.] (Min.) A native arseniate of nickel found near Müsen in Siegen, in tabular crystals. Brande.

PLAİN, n. [L. planus, flat; It. piano, a plan; Sp. plano; Fr. plan. — Dut., Ger., Dan., & Sw. plan.]

1. The representation of any thing drawn on paper, or on a flat surface; a draught; a sketch; a plot; — particularly, a drawing exhibiting a horizontal section of a building. Weale.

Artists and plans relieved my solemn hours; I founded palaces and planted bowers. Prior.

2. A scheme; a project; a contrivance; a device; a design; method; system.

Expatiate free o'er all this scene of man; A mighty maze, but not without a plan. Pope.

Syn. — See DESIGN, SYSTEM.

PLAİN, v. a. [i. PLANNED; pp. PLANNING, PLANNED.]

1. To form a plan or draught of; to delineate or represent on a plane. Wright.

2. To devise; to scheme; to form in design.

Vouchsafe the means of vengeance to debate, And plan with all thy arts the scene of fate. Pope.

† PLA'NA-RY, a. Pertaining to a plane. Bailey.

† PLAÑCH, n. A plank. Sir R. Fanshawe.

PLAÑCH, v. a. [Fr. plancheier; planche, a board.] [i. PLAÑCHED; pp. PLAÑCHING, PLAÑCHED.]

To plank; to cover with boards or planks. [R.]

Planch on a piece as broad as thy cap. Gammer Gurton's Needle, 1551.

† PLAÑCH'ED, a. Made of boards. “A *planch*ed gate.” Shak. “The *planch*ed floor.” Gorges.

† PLAÑCH'ER, n. [Fr.] 1. A plank. Drayton.

2. A floor of wood. Bacon.

PLAÑCH'ÉR, v. n. To make a floor of planchers; to make a wooden floor. [R.] Saneroff.

PLAÑCH'ET, n. [Fr. planchette, a small board.] (Coining.) A piece of metal intended for a coin, with a smooth, flat surface, to be placed in the mill for receiving the die impression. Simmonds.

PLAÑ-CHETTE', n. [Fr.] 1. A small plank or board. Simmonds.

2. A circumferentor. Simmonds.

PLAÑCH'ING, n. 1. (Carp.) The act of one who planches; the laying of floors. [R.] Bailey.

2. A wooden flooring. “The planchings rotten, the walls fallen down.” Carver.

PLAÑE, n. [L. planus, even, flat.]

1. (Geom.) A surface such that, if any two points in it be taken at pleasure and joined by a straight line, that line will lie wholly in the surface; a level superficies. Davies.

“Planes are also frequently used for imaginary surfaces, supposed to cut and pass through solid bodies; and on this construction is founded the whole doctrine of conic sections. In astronomy, the same term is used for an ideal plane passing through certain parts or points of the heavens, as the plane of the horizon, of the ecliptic, equator, &c.; by which are to be understood certain ideal planes passing through those circles of the sphere, or on which they are supposed to be described.” Francis.

2. (Carp.) A carpenter's or joiner's tool, of many varieties, used to produce straight, flat, and even surfaces upon wood. Moxon.

Objective plane, (Surveying), the horizontal plane upon which the object to be delineated is supposed to stand; — usually taken as the horizontal plane of projection. — Plane of a dial, the plane upon which the hour-lines of the dial are constructed. — Plane of projection, one of the planes to which points are referred in descriptive geometry for determining their relative position in space. — Plane of rays, (Shades and Shadows.) a plane parallel to a ray of light. — Perspective plane, the plane upon which the perspective of an object is drawn. — Principal plane, (Spherical Projections) the plane upon which the different circles of the sphere are projected. Davies & Peck.

PLÂNE, n. [Gr. πλάνος; πλάνος, broad; L. planus; It. & Sp. platano; Fr. platane, plane; so named on account of its broad leaves and spreading form.] (Bot.) A tree of the genus Platanus; the plane-tree; the platane; sycamore.

The beech, the swimming alder, and the plane. Dryden.

PLÂNE, v. a. [L. plano; It. pianare; Fr. planer.] [i. PLANED; pp. PLANING, PLANED.]

1. To make smooth with a plane. Mozon.
2. To level; to free from inequalities.

Upon this was laid another layer of small stones and cement, to plane the inequalities of rough stone in which the stones of the upper pavement were fixed. Arbutnot.

PLÂNE, a. [L. planus; It. piano; Sp. plano; Fr. plan.] (Geom.) Level; even; flat; — noting, or pertaining to, a surface, real or imaginary, such that if a right line touch it in two points, it will touch throughout its whole extent.

Plane angle, (Geom.) the angle between two straight lines in a plane. — Plane chart, a chart constructed so that the parallels of latitude and longitude are represented by straight lines parallel to each other, and at the same distance from each other, in every latitude. — Plane curve, a curve all of whose points lie in the same plane. — Plane director, a plane parallel to every element of a warped surface of the first class. — Plane figure, a portion of a plane limited by lines either straight or curved. — Plane geometry, that part of geometry which treats of the relations and properties of plane figures. — Plane problem, a problem which can be solved geometrically, by the aid of the right line and circle only. — Plane sailing, (Nav.) the method of computing the position of a ship and her path, under the supposition that the surface of the earth is a plane. — Plane surveying, that branch of surveying in which the earth's surface is regarded as a plane. — Plane table, (Surveying.) an instrument used for plotting in the field. — Plane triangle, a triangle lying entirely in the same plane. — Plane trigonometry, that part of trigonometry which treats of the relations and properties of the sides and angles of plane triangles. Davies & Peck.

PLÂNE'-IR-ONS, n. pl. Cutting irons, either single or double, to insert in a plane. Simmonds.

PLÂNER, n. 1. One who planes. Sherwood.
2. (Printing.) A flat piece of wood, used by the compositor for forcing down the type in the form, and making the surface perfectly even. Simmonds.

PLÂNER-TRÉE, n. (Bot.) A North American tree of the genus Planera; — so named for J. S. Planer, a German botanist. Gray.

PLÂNE'-SCÂLE, n. A scale upon which are graduated chords, sines, tangents, secants, rhombs, geographical miles, &c.; — used principally by navigators. Davies.

PLÂNET, n. [Gr. πλανήτης; πλανήτης, to wander; πλάνη, a wandering; L. planeta; It. pianeta; Sp. planeta; Fr. planète.] (Astron.) An opaque celestial body, receiving its light from the sun, about which it revolves as a centre, in an orbit not very widely differing from a circle.

Five of the planets, Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn, have been known from the earliest ages. Uranus was discovered by Sir William Herschel on the 13th of March, 1781; and Neptune was found on Sept. 23, 1846, by Dr. Calle, of Berlin, in consequence of calculations made independently and simultaneously by M. Le Verrier, of Paris, and Mr. Adams, of London. Between Mars and Jupiter, a group of minor planets, or asteroids, has been detected since the commencement of the present century. The name planet was given to this class of heavenly bodies because they constantly change their relative situation in the heavens, and thus appear to wander among the constellations. Hind. Herschel.

Inferior planets, Mercury and Venus, which revolve in orbits interior to the earth's path. — Superior planets, those planets whose orbits are exterior to that of the earth. Hind. — Primary planets, those planets which revolve only about the sun, in distinction from secondary planets, satellites, or moons, which revolve also about their primaries.

PLÂNE'-TÂ-BLE, n. (Surveying.) An instrument used for plotting in the field without the necessity of taking field notes. Davies.

PLÂN-ET-Â-RI-ÛM, n. (Astron.) An astronomical machine for exhibiting the relative motions of the planets, and their positions in respect of the sun; an orrery. Brande.

PLÂN-ET-Â-RY, a. [It. & Sp. planetario; Fr. planetaire.]

1. Pertaining to, or consisting of, planets. "Their planetary motions and aspects." Milton.
2. Under the dominion of a planet.

I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me; I am no way tacetuous. Addison.

3. Produced by the planets, or by a planet. "Planetary influence." Shak.

4. Having, or resembling, the nature of a planet; erratic; wandering. "Bright planetary Jove." Blackmore.

Planetary days, the days of the week as shared among the seven planets known to the ancients, each having its day; and hence, in most European languages, the days of the week are still denominated from the planets, as Sunday, Monday, &c. Wright.

PLÂN-ET-ED, a. Belonging to, or having, planets. "Planeted inhabitants." [R.] Young.

PLÂ-NÉT'-I-CÂL, a. Planetary. Browne.

PLÂN-ET-LESS, a. Destitute of planets. A shoreless sea, a sky sunless and planetless. Shelley.

PLÂN-ET-ÛID, n. [Gr. πλανήτης, wandering, and ἴδιος, form.] (Astron.) One of the minor planets revolving between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter; an asteroid.

The discovery of planetoids was commenced in the present century. Ec. Rev.

PLÂNE'-TRÉE, n. [Fr. plane.] — See PLÂNE.] (Bot.) A plant or tree of the genus Platanus.

The Oriental plane-tree has palmated leaves resembling those of the common sycamore. The Platanus occidentalis, or American plane-tree, is also called, in the United States, by the names of button-wood, water-beech, and sycamore; in Canada it is called cotton-tree. The plane-tree of Scotland is the Acer pseudo-platanus, or sycamore maple. Eng. Cyc. Loudon.

PLÂN-ET-STRÛCK, a. Affected by the malignant influence of a planet; blasted. Suckling.

"The word is by no means disused, though the superstition is discarded." Nares.

PLÂN-ET-TÛLE, n. A little planet. Conybeare.

PLÂN-ET-WHÊELS, n. pl. (Mech.) A mechanical contrivance for producing a variable angular motion, such as that of the radius vector of a planet in its orbit.

"The common contrivance for this purpose consists of two elliptical wheels connected by teeth running into each other, and revolving on their foci. While the driving wheel moves uniformly, the radius vector of the other has the required motion." Ogilvie.

PLÂN-ÛENT, a. [L. plango, plangens, to beat.] Beating in the manner of a wave; dashing.

The seaman, who sleeps sound upon the deck, Nor hears the loud lamenting of the blast, Nor heeds the weltering of the plangent wave. H. Taylor.

PLÂN-I-FÔ-LI-OÛS, a. [L. planus, plain, and folium, a leaf.] (Bot.) Consisting of plain leaves, in circular rows round the centre. Martin.

PLÂ-NÛM'-E-TÛR, n. [L. planus, level, and μετρον, a measure.] An instrument designed to measure, by mechanical means and at once, the area of any plane figure drawn on paper. Nichol.

PLÂN-I-MÊ-T'R-IC, { a. Relating to plane-measure.
PLÂN-I-MÊ-T'R-I-CÂL, { try. Johnson.

PLÂ-NÛM'-E-TÛY, n. [L. planus, plain, and Gr. μετρον, to measure; It. planimetria; Sp. planometria; Fr. planimétrie.] That branch of applied geometry which treats of the measurement of plane areas; — opposed to stereotomy. Davies.

PLÂN-ÛNG-MÂ-CHÛNE', n. (Mech.) An instrument for reducing the surface to a true and smooth face, by means of planes, or instruments of a similar nature, which are actuated by the power of machinery. Weale.

PLÂN-I-PÛN-NATE, n. (Ent.) One of a tribe of neuropterous insects, which have four flat wings of nearly equal size, as the ant-lion. Brande.

PLÂN-I-PÛT'-A-LOÛS, a. [L. planus, flat, and Gr.

αλος, a leaf.] (Bot.) Having flat petals or leaves; flat-leaved. Bailey.

PLÂN-ÛSH, v. a. [i. PLANISHED; pp. PLANISHING, PLANISHED.] To polish; to smooth; to make plain, as silversmiths. Martin.

PLÂN-ÛSH-ÛR, n. A tool used by turners for smoothing brass-work. Weale.

PLÂN-ÛSPHÊRE, n. [L. planus, plane, and sphæra, a sphere; It. & Sp. planisferio; Fr. planisphère.] A projection of the various circles of the sphere upon a plane. Davies.

PLÂNK (plångk, 82), n. [L. planca; Fr. planche.] — Dut. plank; Ger. & Dan. planke; Sw. plank. — W. plane; Gael. planc, plang. — From Gr. πλάτος, anything flat and broad. Buttmann.
1. A broad piece of timber thicker than a board, — usually from 1½ to 4 inches thick.

Some Turkish bows are of that strength as to pierce a plank of six inches. Hikins.

2. Any thing resembling a plank; a slab.

Over his grave was soon after erected . . . a monument of freestone, with a plank of marble thereon. Wood.

PLÂNK (plångk, 82), v. a. [i. PLANKED; pp. PLANKING, PLANKED.] To cover or lay with planks.

The sides were planked with pine. Dryden.

PLÂNK'-RÔAD, n. A road formed upon planks laid transversely. Simmonds.

PLÂNK'-Y, a. Constructed of planks. "Before the planky gates." Chapman.

PLÂN-LESS, a. Destitute of a plan.

Now every planless measure, chance event, Will they connect. Coleridge.

PLÂN-NÛR, n. One who forms a plan or design.

PLÂ-NO-CÔM-PRESSÛD' (-prêst'), a. [L. planus, plane, and Eng. compressed.] (Bot.) Compressed down to a flattish surface. Loudon.

PLÂ-NO-CÔN-CÂVE, a. [L. planus, plain, and Eng. concave.] Flat on one side, and concave on the other. — See LENS. Francis.

PLÂ-NO-CÔN-Û-CÂL, a. [L. planus, plain, and Eng. conical.] Level on one side, and conical on the other. Grew.

PLÂ-NO-CÔN-VÛX, a. [L. planus, plain, and Eng. convex.] Flat on the one side, and convex on the other. — See LENS. Stewart.

PLÂ-NO-HÔR-I-ZÔN-TÂL, a. [L. planus, plain, and Eng. horizontal.] Having a level, horizontal surface or position. Smart.

PLÂ-NO-QR-BÛC-Û-LÂR, a. Flat and circular.

PLÂ-NÛR-BÛS, n. [L. planus, flat, and orbis, an orb.] (Zool.) A genus of fresh-water mollusks.

"The species are numerous, and distinguished by the shells being flat, discoidal, and many-whirled, all the whirls being visible equally above or below." Baird.

PLÂ-NO-SÛ-BU-LATE, a. [L. planus, plain, and Eng. subulate.] (Bot.) Smooth, and awl-shaped. Browne.

PLÂNT, n. [L. planta; It. pianta; Sp. planta; Fr. plante.] — A. S. & Dut. plant; Ger. pflanze; Dan. plante; Icel. plantir; Sw. planta. — Ir. pluinda; Bret. planten, plants; Gael. plantit; W. plant. — "The original idea seems to be what is produced or shot forth." Bosworth.

1. (Bot.) An organized being destitute of a nervous system, and nourished exclusively by the mineral kingdom; a body originating in a seed and producing seeds in its turn; any vegetable production; a vegetable.

"The differences between plants and animals seem at first sight so obvious and so great, that it would appear more natural to inquire how they resemble, rather than how they differ from each other. All these distinctions, however, gradually disappear as we come to the lower kinds of plants and the lower animals. Many animals (such as barnacles, coral animals, and polypes) are fixed to some support as completely as the plant is to the soil; while many plants are not fixed, and some move from place to place by powers of their own. All animals move some of their parts freely; yet in the extent and rapidity of the motion, many of them are surpassed by the common sensitive plant, by the Venus's fly-trap, and by some other vegetables; while whole tribes of aquatic plants are so freely and briskly locomotive, that they have until lately been taken for animals. It is among these microscopic tribes that the animal and vegetable kingdoms most nearly approach each other, — so nearly, that it is still uncertain where to draw the line between them." Gray.

2. A sapling; a young tree. [R.]

Take a plant of stubborn oak,
And labor him with many a stubborn stroke. Dryden.

3. [L. planta.] † The sole of the foot. Jonson.

4. The machinery, apparatus, or fixtures by which a business or manufacture is carried on. "The plant of a brewery." Simmonds.

5. "There is a coarse pronunciation of this word, chiefly among the vulgar, which rhymes it with ant. This pronunciation seems a remnant of that broad sound which was probably given to the a before two consonants in all words, but which has been gradually wearing away, and which is now, except in a few words, become a mark of vulgarity." Walker.

PLANT, v. a. [L. planto; It. plantare; Sp. plantar; Fr. planter. — A. S. plantian.] [i. PLANTED; pp. PLANTING, PLANTED.]

1. To put into the ground in order to grow, as seeds or bulbs; to set; to insert; to root.

There are many gardens of the French king... ordering all the plants which are lately planted to be grubbed up. Hume.

2. To settle; to fix; to establish. "To plant a colony." Johnson.

I will advise you where to plant yourselves. Shak.

3. To fill or adorn with plants. "To plant a walk in undulating curves." Johnson.

4. To lay the first course of stone in building.

5. To direct or point, as a cannon. Johnson.

PLANT, v. n. To perform the act of planting.

To build, to plant, whatever you intend,
In all, let nature never be forgot. Pope.

PLANT'ABLE, a. That may be planted. Clarke.

† PLANT'AGE, n. [L. plantago, a plantain; Fr. plantage.] An herb, or herbs in general. Shak.

PLANTAIN (plān'tin), n. [L. plantago; It. piantaggine; Fr. plantain.] (Bot.)

1. A plant of the genus Plantago.

2. The species of this genus are numerous and herbaceous, and are found in almost all parts of the world, but chiefly in temperate and cool regions. Burrd.

3. A plant or tree and its fruit, of the genus Musa, found in the countries of the torrid zone.

4. The plantain attains a height of fifteen or twenty feet, with leaves often more than six feet long, and nearly two feet broad. Its fruit is extensively used by the inhabitants of the torrid zone as an article of food. Gerard and other old authors name it Adam's apple, from a notion that it was the forbidden fruit of Eden; whilst others supposed it to be the grapes brought out of the promised land by the spies of Moses. The banana is a variety of the plantain. Loudon. Eng. Cyc.

PLANTAIN-EATER, n. (Ornith.) A bird of the family Muscophagide and sub-family Muscophagine. — See MUSCOPHAGINE. Gray.

† PLANT'AL, a. Pertaining to plants. Glanvill.

PLANT'AR, a. [L. plantaris; planta, the sole of the foot.] (Anat.) Relating, or belonging to, the sole of the foot. Dunglison.

PLANTATION, n. [L. plantatio; planto, to plant; planta, a plant; It. piantazione; Sp. plantacion; Fr. plantation.]

1. The act or the practice of planting.

In bowen and field he sought where any tuft
Of grove or garden plot more pleasant lay,
Their tendence or plantation for delight. Milton.

2. The place planted; — in Great Britain, exclusively applied to a piece of ground planted with trees for the purpose of producing timber or coppice wood; but in new countries not generally cultivated, and more especially in warm climates, to land appropriated to the production of important crops, as the sugar-cane, cotton, rice, tobacco, coffee, &c. Brande.

Let his plantations stretch from down to down,
First shade a country, and then raise a town. Pope.

3. † A colony; a dependency. Bacon.

Towns here are few, either of the old or new plantations. Heylin.

4. In England, this word was formerly applied to the British colonies in the West Indies and America, but never to any of the British dominions in Europe. The term colony is the one now more generally used. Bourier. Simmonds.

5. The act of bringing into a country; introduction; establishment. "The first plantation of Christianity in this island." K. Charles.

Syn. — Plantation is a term applied to an estate usually larger than a farm; as a plantation for raising tobacco, cotton, rice, sugar, coffee, &c. A farm consists of lands in a state of pasturage and tillage, for raising the different products of agriculture.

PLANT'-CANE, n. The first crop of sugar-canes raised from cuttings. Simmonds.

PLANT'-CUT-TER, n. (Ornith.) A bird of the family Fringillide and sub-family Phytotomine. — See PHYTOTOXINÆ. Eng. Cyc.

PLANT'-EAT-ING, a. Eating plants; phytophagous. Eng. Cyc.

PLANT'ED, p. a. Settled; well-grounded. Shak.

PLANT'ER, n. 1. One who plants; one who sows, sets, introduces, or establishes. Dryden.

2. A proprietor and cultivator, as in the Southern U. S. or the West Indies. Locke.

3. The naked trunk of a tree, one end of which is firmly planted in the bed of a river, while the other rises near the surface of the water. It is more dangerous to navigation than a common snag or sawyer. [U. S.] Bartlett.

PLANT'ER-SHIP, n. The business of a planter.

4. "In the West Indies, plantership denotes the management of a sugar plantation, including not only the cultivation of the cane, but the extraction of sugar, and the making of sugar-spirits." Crang.

PLANT'Y-CLE, n. 1. A small, young plant. Darwin.

2. A plant in embryo; a plantule. Smart.

PLANT'Y-GRÁDE, n. [L. planta, the sole of the foot, and gradior, to walk.] An animal that walks on the whole foot, as the bear. Kirby.

PLANT'Y-GRÁDE, a. Having the whole or a part of the sole of the foot placed flat on the ground in walking, as is the case with certain carnivorous animals. Baird.

PLANT'ING, n. 1. The act of one who plants. Isa. lxi. 3.

2. A plantation. Ed. Rev.

PLANT'LESS, a. Destitute of plants. Ed. Rev.

PLANT'LET, n. (Bot.) A small, undeveloped, or rudimentary plant. Gray.

There is hardly an exception to the fact that the plumule exists ready formed in the seed in some shape or other. Gray.

PLANT'-LIKE, a. Resembling plants. Kirby.

PLANT'-LOUSE, n. (Ent.) An insect that infests plants; an hemipterous insect of the family Aphidæ, or genus Aphis, having a very soft, and usually oval, body. Harris.

PLANT-TÓC'RA-CY, n. [Eng. planter and Gr. pártos, to rule.] A body of planters. Ec. Rev.

PLANT'TULE, n. A little plant; a planticle. Paley.

PLANT'Y, n. An Irish dance. Smart.

PLAQ'UET, n. A petticoat. — See FLACKET.

PLASH, n. [Dut. plas.] 1. A pond; a puddle. "A shallow plash." Shak.

2. [See the verb.] A branch partly cut off and bound to other branches. Miller.

PLASH, v. a. [Dut. plassen; Ger. plitschern; Dan. pluske; Sw. pliska. — "Formed from the sound, say the etymologists." Richardson.] [i. PLASHED; pp. PLASHING, PLASHED.] To dash; to disturb; to splash.

Plashing the water in magic order. Sir T. Herbert.

PLASH, v. a. [Fr. plisser.] To bind and interweave the branches of. Reyn.

Woe to the gardener's pale, the farmer's hedge Plashed neatly, and secured with driven stakes. Cowper.

PLASH'ING, n. Act of binding and interweaving branches of trees for fences. Simmonds.

PLASH'ÓOT, n. A pool; a splash. [n.]

Woodcocks arrive first on the north coast, where almost every hedge serveth for a road, and every plash for a spring to catch them. Carriv.

PLASH'Y, a. Filled with puddles; watery; splashy. He filled up unsound and plashy fens. Milton.

PLÁSM, n. [Gr. πλάσμα; πλάσσω, to form; L. plasma.]

1. A mould; a matrix in which any thing is cast or formed. Woodward.

2. (Phys.) The fluid of the blood in which the red particles are suspended, to which its color is due, consisting of serum holding fibrine in solution. Brande.

PLÁSMIA, n. [L., from Gr. πλάσμα, a counterfeit.] (Min.) A faintly translucent chalcedony, approaching jasper, having a greenish color spotted with yellow and whitish dots, and a pearly lustre. Dana.

1. (Law.) To carry on a plea or suit: — to conduct that part of an action which consists in the allegations of the respective parties; to make allegation in a cause, especially an allegation of fact in a cause: — to make that allegation of fact, on the part of a defendant, which follows, and is opposed to, the plaintiff's declaration: — to argue at the bar. Burrill.

2. "It is a general rule of pleading, that a party, at each successive stage of the process, must demur or plead to the allegation of his adversary. In practice, the plaintiff is said to declare, the defendant to plead, the plaintiff to reply." Burrill.

2. To offer allegations or arguments; to reason; to argue.

Many grave persons that against her plead. Spenser.
To plead for that which I would not obtain.

3. To be offered as a plea; to apologize.

Since you can love, and yet your error see,
The same resistance power my plead for me. Dryden.

4. It is a regular verb; yet the Scotch use pled, or plead, for the imperfect tense and past participle, instead of pleaded; as also do many Americans, especially in conversation.

PLÊAD, v. a. 1. To allege in pleading or argument; to use as a plea.

They could not justly pled law of nations. Spenser.
If they will plead against me my reproach. Joh xix. 8.

PLÉDGE (plēj), n. [Mid. L. plegium; Old Fr. pleige. — A. S. plēhtan, to plight. Hicks.]
 1. Something put in pawn; something given or deposited as security for the repayment of money or the fulfilment of a promise; a deposit; a pawn; a gage.

If a pawnbroker receives plate or jewels as a pledge. Blackstone.

But threw his gauntlet as a sacred pledge
 His cause in combat the next day to try. Spenser.

The great humility, zeal, and devotion, which appeared to be in them, was, in all men's opinion, a pledge of their heavenless meaning. Hobbes.

In law, the term pledge is confined to personal property; and it is essential to the contract that there should be an actual delivery of the thing, as security for some debt or engagement. Kent. Story.

2. (Old Eng. Law.) A person who becomes security for another; a surety. Whishaw.

3. A hostage. Raleigh. Dryden.

4. A drinking of one's health; a health in drinking. — See PLEDGE, v. Shak.

Dead pledge, (Law) an old term for a mortgage. — Living pledge, an estate granted to another, for a sum of money borrowed, to be held by him until the rents and profits of it shall repay the same. Whishaw. — To hold in pledge, to keep as security. — To put in pledge, to pawn.

Syn. — See DEPOSIT.

PLÉDGE (plēj), v. a. [Mid. L. plegio; Old Fr. pleiger. — Ger. pflegen.] [i. PLEDGED; pp. PLEDGING, PLEDGED.]
 1. To put or deposit in pawn; to give or deposit as security for repayment of money or the fulfilment of a promise; to pawn; to plight.

An honest factor stole a gem away;
 He pledged it to the knight. Pope.

2. To secure by a pledge. "To pledge my vow, I give my hand." Shak.

3. To invite to drink by drinking first of the cup; to drink the health of.

Pledge me, my friend, and drink till thou be't wise. Conoley.

"The expression 'I'll pledge you,' in drinking, is deduced by some of our writers on popular antiquities from the times when the Danes were in possession of England. It is said to have been the custom of that people to seize the moment when a native of the island was in the act of drinking, to stab him with a knife or dagger; whence people could not drink in company unless some one present would be their pledge or surety that they should receive no harm. Others state the custom to have taken rise from the death of King Edward the Martyr, son to Edgar, who, by the contrivance of his step-mother Elfrida, was stabbed in the back as he was drinking. Brand thought the expression meant no more than that, if you took your cup or glass, I pledged myself to you that I would follow your example." P. Cyc.

PLÉDGE-ÉE, n. (Law) The person to whom a pledge is given; a pawnnee. Burrill.

PLÉDGE'LESS, a. Having no pledge. Qu. Rev.

 1. (Grecian & Roman Myth.) The seven daughters of Atlas and Pleione, placed by Jupiter among the stars. W. Smith.

2. (Astron.) A cluster of seven stars in the neck of Taurus, assigned by Mädler as the central point of the sidereal system. Herschel.

"I have preferred those orthoepists who mark these words as I have done to Mr. Sheridan, who makes the first syllable like the verb to ply. Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Scott, and Perry, the only orthoepists from whom we can know the sound of the diphthong ea, give it as I have done; and Johnson, by placing the accent after the e, seems to have done the same; but the sound we invariably give to these vowels in plebeian is a sufficient proof of English analogy, and that pronouncing them like eye is an affectation of adhering to the Greek, from which Pleiades is derived." Walker.

|| PLÉ'IADES (plē'yadz) [plē'yadz, W. P. F. Sm. R. Wb.; plē'adz, E. Ja.; plē'yadz, S. K.], n. pl. (Astron.) The Pleiades. Dryden.

Plenary inspiration, (Theol.) that kind or degree of inspiration which excludes all mixture of error.

|| "Some very respectable speakers make the vowel e in the first syllable of this word long; but analogy and the best usage seem to shorten the e, as they do the e in granary. Mr. Nares, W. Johnston, Buchanan, and Entick adopt the second pronunciation; and Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Dr. Ash, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Perry, the first. Nor do I see any reason that the e should not be short in this word as well as in plenitude, in which all our orthoepists, except Buchanan, pronounce the e as in plenty." Walker.

2. A game at cards, much practised in the southern parts of the U. S. Bartlett.

PÖK'ER-ISH, a. Frightful; causing fear, especially to children. [Colloquial, U. S.] Dr. Mott.

PÖK'ER-PİCT'URE, n. An imitation of a bistrewashed drawing, executed by singeing the surface of white wood with a heated poker.

PÖKE-WĒED, n. (Bot.) The common name of plants of the genus Phytolacca. Gray.

PÖK'ING, a. Drudging; servile. [Low.] Gray.

PÖK'ING-STİCK, n. An instrument anciently used to adjust the plaits of ruffs. Middleton.

PÖ-LÄC'CA, n. [It.] 1. A polacre. Brande.

2. A Polish air and dance; polonaise. Dwight.

† PÖ-LÄCK, n. A Pole; a Polander. Shak.

PÖ-LÄ'CRE (pö-lä'ker) [pö-lä'ker, K. Sm.; pö-lä-ker, Ja. Todd; pö-lä'ker, Wb. Barclay.] [It. polacca; Sp. polacre; Fr. polacre, polaque.] (Naut.) A vessel, common in the Mediterranean, with three masts, each usually formed of one piece, and having square sails on the mainmast, and lateen sails on the fore and mizzen; — also written polacca, and polaque. Mar. Dict.

PÖ-LÄ'QUE (pö-lä'k'), [Fr.] A polacre. Bower.

PÖ-LÄR, a. [It. polare; Sp. polar; Fr. polaire.]

1. Pertaining to, or near, the pole or poles.

2. Issuing, or proceeding from, the regions near the pole. “Polar winds.” Milton.

Polar circles, (Astron.) two parallels of latitude whose planes pass through the poles of the ecliptic at the distance of 23° 28' from the pole of the earth. — Polar clock, an optical apparatus for ascertaining the hour of the day from the polarization of solar light. — Polar coördinates, (Math.) a system of coördinates for determining the position of any point in a plane, or in space, by reference to a fixed point and a fixed direction. They consist of a variable distance called the radius vector, and one variable angle in a plane, or two variable angles in space. Ellot. — Polar distances, the distance of any circle of a sphere from its pole, measured on a great circle passing through the pole of the circle; also the distance of a point on the surface of a sphere from the pole of the sphere, measured on a great circle passing through the point and the pole. Da. & P. — Polar projection, a representation of the earth or the heavens projected on the plane of a polar circle. Brande. Olmsted.

PÖ-LÄR-BĒAR, n. (Zool.) A species of bear inhabiting the arctic regions; Thalarectos maritimus. — See BEAR. Baird.

PÖ-LÄR-ĒHY, n. See POLYARCHY. Evanson.

† PÖ-LÄ-RĪ-LY, ad. Towards a pole. Brown.

PÖ-LÄR-İM'E-TER, n. [Eng. polar and Gr. μέτρον, a measure.] (Physics.) A polariscope. Nichol.

PÖ-LÄR'I-SCOPE, n. [Eng. polar and Gr. σκοπεῖν, to view.] (Opt.) An instrument variously constructed for polarizing light and testing or analyzing its properties. Its essential parts are the polarizer and the analyzer. Brewster.

“Every such instrument consists of a polarizer and an analyzer; the former polarizes the ray, the latter discerns that it is polarized, and enables us to trace its characteristics.” Nichol.

PÖ-LÄR'I-TY, n. [It. polarità; Fr. polarité.]

1. (Physics.) A term used to designate opposite or dissimilar properties or powers simultaneously developed by a common cause in opposite or contrasted parts, as in the extremities of a magnet, or in the sides of a polarized ray of light, situated respectively in the plane of polarization and the plane perpendicular to it.

2. The tension or state of tension of the electrolytic and metallic conductors of a voltaic or other electric circuit, in virtue of which the compound molecules of the electrolyte are arranged in alternations of dissimilar elements or components, and the molecules of the metallic conductors assume a new condition and acquire new properties, as a transverse power of attraction and repulsion, magnetizing power, power of inducing electric currents, &c. Faraday.

An iron bar acquires polarity by magnetism, and, when freely suspended from its centre of gravity, arranges itself in the magnetic meridian, and points to the magnetic poles of the earth. When light is supposed to consist of material particles from the sun, it is necessary, in order to explain certain phenomena of optics, to assume that the particles are endowed with polarity, which merely signifies that different sides of a particle have different physical properties. Brande. — See POLARIZATION.

PÖ-LÄR-İZ'A-BLE, a. That may be polarized; susceptible of polarization. Phil. Mag.

PÖ-LÄR-I-ZÄ'TION, n. [It. polarizzazione; Fr. polarisation.] (Optics.) The influence or action by which a ray of light, when reflected from a polished plate of any transparent substance at a certain angle, or when transmitted through a thin plate of tourmaline, cut parallel to the crystallographic axis, in a plane perpendicular to that axis, or when transmitted through a doubly refracting crystal, or when submitted to various other influences, becomes endowed with opposite or dissimilar properties in two planes, perpendicular to each other, — in virtue of which difference it is said to have sides, to possess polarity, to be polarized; — a term used to designate the peculiar properties of polarized light; — a branch of optics which treats of the phenomena of polarized light. — See POLARIZED. Lloyd.

Angle of polarization. See POLARIZING ANGLE. — Plane of polarization, the plane of primitive incidence or reflection of a ray of light polarized by simple reflection; the plane in which a polarized ray is susceptible of complete reflection; the plane perpendicular to the tourmaline plate which, when the plate extinguishes the polarized ray, is parallel to the axis of the plate, and which, when the plate transmits the polarized ray with maximum intensity, is perpendicular to that axis. Powell. — Circular polarization and elliptical polarization, modifications acquired by plane polarized light incident perpendicularly on Fresnel's rhomb (see RHOMB), internally reflected by two opposite sides in succession, and perpendicularly emergent at the other end; the light being circularly polarized when the inclination of the plane of polarization of the incident ray to the plane of reflection is 45°, and elliptically polarized when the inclination is greater or less than 45°. These modifications are acquired also in several other ways. Light circularly or elliptically polarized is reconverted into plane polarized light by being transmitted, as before, through Fresnel's rhomb. Lloyd. — Magnetic circular polarization, circular polarization impressed on plane polarized light by certain transparent solids and liquids under the influence of a powerful electro-magnet, or of a helix traversed by a powerful electric current. Faraday. — Rotatory polarization, a modification acquired by plane polarized light on being transmitted perpendicularly through a plate of rock crystal cut at right angles to the optical axis, in virtue of which the plane of polarization is turned or deviated through a certain angle proportional to the thickness of the plate, and becomes, as it were, a twisted surface of double curvature; acquired also by transmission through certain liquids. Powell. — Colored polarization, a term used to designate the chromatic phenomena developed by the interferences of polarized light. Perina.

PÖ-LÄR-IZE, v. a. [Fr. polariser.] [2. POLARIZED; pp. POLARIZING, POLARIZED.] To develop polarity in; to endow with opposite or dissimilar properties in opposite or contrasted parts.

All reflecting substances are capable of polarizing light, if incident at proper angles. Brande.

PÖ-LÄR-İZED, p. a. Having opposite or dissimilar powers or properties in opposite or in contrasted parts; having polarity. — See POLARITY.

Polarized light, or plane polarized light, light having, among others, the three following characteristic properties: 1. If it is incident on a plate of glass, or other transparent substance, at the polarizing angle, and the plane of incidence coincides with the plane of polarization, it is wholly reflected; but if the plane of incidence is perpendicular to the plane of polarization, it is wholly transmitted. In intermediate planes and at other angles of incidence, it is partially reflected and partially transmitted. 2. If the polarized ray is incident perpendicularly on a thin plate of tourmaline, cut parallel to the crystallographic axis, and that axis is coincident with or parallel to the plane of polarization, the ray is wholly intercepted; but if the axis is perpendicular to the plane of polarization, the ray is transmitted with maximum intensity. 3. The polarized ray gives, on being transmitted through a doubly refracting crystal, only one image, when the principal section (see SECTION) of the crystal is parallel or perpendicular to the plane of polarization, while it gives two images of inferior and varying intensity in all other positions. Powell. Pouillet.

According to the undulatory theory, plane polarized light consists in a rapid succession of waves of ethereal molecules, in which the vibrations are rectilinear and transverse to the direction of propagation, and are performed in one and the same plane, while in common light the vibrations are performed in different planes. All these planes are parallel to the direction of propagation. In the circularly polarized ray, the ethereal molecules vibrate or revolve in circles whose planes are perpendicular to the direction of propagation; and, in the elliptically polarized ray, in ellipses whose major axes are perpendicular to the direction of propagation, and all in the same plane.

Oppositely or rectangularly polarized, applied to two rays or portions of polarized light whose planes of polarization are at right angles to each other.

PÖ-LÄR-İZ-ER, n. (Opt.) The part of the polariscope by which light is polarized; — distinguished from analyzer, the part by which the properties of the polarized light are analyzed.

PÖ-LÄR-İZ-ING, a. Developing polarity in; capable of endowing with polarity.

Polarizing angle, (Opt.) the angle of incidence, different for different transparent substances, at which light acquires maximum polarity by simple reflection; angle of polarization. The polarizing angle for glass is 56° 45', and for every transparent substance its tangent is equal to the index of refraction.

PÖ-LÄ-RY, a. Tending to, or having direction towards, a pole. Brown.

PÖL'DER, n. [Dut.] In Flanders, a very fertile tract of land reclaimed from the sea by embankments. P. Cyc.

PÖLD'WÄY, n. A kind of coarse sacking. Weale.

PÖLE, n. [Gr. πόλος, a pivot, an axis, a pole; πολεῖν, to turn round; L. polus; It. & Sp. polo; Fr. pole. — Dut. pool; Ger., Dan., & Sw. pol.]

1. One of the extremities of an axis of rotation of a sphere or a spheroid. Brande.

2. (Geog.) One of the extremities of the axis of the earth; a point ninety degrees from the equator. Milton.

3. (Astron.) One of the extremities of the axis of the celestial sphere. Herschel.

4. The heavens; the sky.

Befriend me, Night, best patroness of grief; Over the pole thy thickest mantle throw. Milton.

5. (Physics.) One of the opposite extremities or contrasted parts in which opposite or dissimilar properties are simultaneously developed by a common cause, or which possess polarity.

The poles of a magnet are the opposite points in which the magnetic force is collected.

Magnetic pole, one of the points on the earth towards which the magnetic needle points, or where the intensity of the magnetic force is a maximum, and above which the dipping needle is vertical. Sabine.
Mrs. Somerville. — Pole of a circle of a sphere, one of the points in which a diameter of the sphere, perpendicular to the plane of the circle, pierces the surface of the sphere. P. Cyc. Davies. — Pole of a glass, (Opt.) the thickest part of a convex lens, or the thinnest part of a concave lens, which, when the lens is truly ground, is exactly in the middle of its surface. Hutton. — Poles of maximum cold, two points on the surface of the earth, in each hemisphere, of the least mean annual temperature, the two in the northern hemisphere being situated, one in west longitude from Greenwich 100°, and in 60° north latitude, with a mean temperature of -33° Fahrenheit; — and the other being situated in east longitude 95°, and in 80° north latitude, with a mean temperature of 1° Fahrenheit, and each surrounded by isothermal lines in returning curve lines. Brewster. — Poles of the voltaic battery. See VOLTAIC. — Poles of the ecliptic, (Astron.) two opposite points in the celestial sphere 90° distant from the plane of the ecliptic.

PÖLE, n. [Gr. πόλις, or φαλῆς; L. palus; It. & Sp. palo; Fr. pale; A. S. pal; Dut. paal; Ger. pfahl; Dan. pæl; Sw. pale; W. pawel; Gael. poll. — See PALB.]

1. A long staff or stake; a long, slender piece of wood. Arbutnot.

2. A staff to measure with. Bacon.

3. A measure of length equal to sixteen and one half feet; a rod; a perch. Mortimer.

4. The shaft of a cart or wagon; thill.

Bare poles, (Naut.) poles or masts having the sails all furled. Mar. Dict.

PÖLE, n. (Geog.) A native or an inhabitant of Poland; a Polander.

PÖLE, v. a. [Fr. POLED; pp. POLING, POLED.]

1. To furnish with poles for support. "To pole your hops." Mortimer.

2. To carry on or with poles, as hay. Smart.

3. To push along by a pole or poles, as a boat.

PÖLE-AXE, n. A weapon combining a hatchet, pike, and serrated hammer, much used by cavalry in the fifteenth century. Fairholt.

One hung a pole-axe at his saddle bow. Dryden.

PÖLE-CÄT, n. [Supposed to be a corruption of Polish cat; but this seems to be not much better than a guess. Eng. Cyc.] (Zool.) A digitigrade, carnivorous quadruped of the family Mustelidae, or weasels, of which there are several species in various countries, Polecat (Mustela putorius).

all of which diffuse a most disagreeable odor. European polecat, Mustela putorius of Linnaeus, the fur of which is known under the name of fitch; the fitcher, or fitchet weasel. — North-American polecat, the minx; Mustela vison of Gmelin. "The polecat of the North American rivers, to which the name of minx has been transferred." Eng. Cyc.

PÖLE-CLİPT, a. Clipt on a pole, as a vine. "Pole-clipt vineyards." Shak.

† PÖLE/DÄ-VY, n. A coarse cloth or canvas.

Your poleclavy wares will not do for me. Howel.

PÖLE-Ë-VIL, n. See POLL-EVIL.

PÖLE-LÄTHE, n. A lathe turned by passing a cord round the substance to be turned, and fastening one end to the treadle, and the other end to an elastic pole fixed above. Francois.

PÖL'E-MÄRCH, n. [Gr. πολέμαρχος; πόλεμος, war, and άρχω, to command; Fr. polymarche.] (Gr. Ant.) Originally, an officer intrusted either with the command of an army abroad, or the superintendence of the war department at home, and sometimes with both, — at a later period, an officer on whom devolved the protection and superintendence of resident aliens. W. Smith.

PÖLE-MÄST, n. (Naut.) A mast formed of a single tree. Crabb.

PÖ-LËM'IC, n. A disputant; a controversialist. Each stanch polemic, stubborn as a rook. Pope.

PÖ-LËM'IC, a. [Gr. πολεμικός, warlike; πό-PO-LËM'IC-AL, λημος, war; It. & Sp. polemico; Fr. polemique.] Controversial; disputative; disputatious. "Polemie discourses." Fell.

Polemie, at present, according to the popular usage, has some fantastic, fanciful connection with controversial theology. De Quincey.

PÖ-LËM'ICS, n. Controversy or disputation, especially on theological subjects. Le. Rev.

PÖL'E-MİST, n. [Gr. πολεμιστής, a warrior.] A controversialist; a polemic. Nichols. Qu. Rev.

PÖ-LËM'Q-SCÖPE, n. [Gr. πόλεμος, war, and σκοπῖω, to view.] (Opt.) A kind of oblique perspective glass for seeing objects which cannot be seen by direct vision. Brande.

† PÖL'E-MY, n. [Gr. πολεμία.] Contention; opposition; warfare. Sir E. Dering.

PÖ-LËN'TA, n. [It.] 1. In Italy, a sort of pudding made of Indian corn-meal. W. Ency.

2. In France, porridge made of ground chestnuts and milk. Simmonds.

PÖLE'STÄR, n. 1. A star near the celestial pole, or nearly vertical to the pole of the earth; the polar star; the load star; the north star. If a pilot, at sea, cannot see the polestar, let him steer his course by such stars as best appear to him. King Charles.

2. A guide; a conductor; a director. Mede.

PÖL'EY-GRÄSS, n. (Bot.) A plant of the genus Lythrum. London Ency.

PÖL'EY-MÖUN'TAIN, n. [L. polium (Gr. πόλιον), a strong-smelling plant, and Eng. mountain.] (Bot.) A plant of the genus Teucrium, or germander; — also written holly-mountain. Miller.

PÖL'İ-AN-İTE, n. (Min.) A crystallized peroxide of manganese. Brande.

PÖ-LİCE' (po-lēs'), n. [Gr. πολιτεία; πόλις, a city; L. politia; It. polizia; Sp. policia; Fr. police.]

1. The regulation and government of a city, town, or country, so far as regard, the inhabitants, or so far as relates to the maintenance of good order, cleanliness, health, &c. Bouvier.

2. A body of civil officers by which a city, town, or country is regulated. Bouvier.

PÖ-LİCE'-CÖN'STÄ-BLE, n. An ordinary policeman. Simmonds.

PÖ LİCED' (po-lēst'), a. Policed. [R.] Bacon.

PÖ-LİCE'-İN-SPECT'OR, n. An inspector or superintendent of police. Simmonds.

PÖ-LİCE'-JÜ-RY, n. (Lav.) A name given to certain officers who collectively exercise jurisdiction in certain cases of police, as levying taxes, &c. [Louisiana, U. S.] Bouvier.

PÖ-LİCE'-MÄG'İS-TRÄTE, n. A stipendiary law-officer who presides at a police court, and tries and sentences offenders brought before him, upon charges preferred by the police. Simmonds.

PÖ-LİCE'-ÖFFİ-CER, n. An officer of the civil government; a policeman. Lewis.

PÖ-LİCE'-SER'GEANT (sär-or sër), n. A superior police-officer. Simmonds.

PÖ-LİCE'-STÄ-TION, n. A station for the police; the place where the police assemble for orders, or to which they take offenders. Simmonds.

PÖ-Lİ'CİAL (po-līsh'al), a. Relating to the police. [R.] E. A. Poe.

PÖL'İ-CİED (-süd), a. Regulated by laws; having a system of laws and administration. Young.

PÖL'İ-CY, n. [It. & Sp. politica; Fr. politique, police. — See PÖLİCE, and PÖLİTY.]

1. The management of public affairs, whether with respect to foreign powers or internal arrangement; administration of public affairs, foreign or domestic; the art of government; government; rule. Johnson.

2. Management of common affairs; prudent conduct; discretion: — art; skill; address. Sound policy is never at variance with substantial justice. Dr. Parr.

Syn. — Policy and polity are both derived from the Greek word πολιτεία, the former signifying the art of government, the latter the form of government, and is chiefly applied to ecclesiastical government; as,

"Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity." Policy is also often used in the senses of prudence, or the management of any business, as, "Honesty is the best policy."

PÖL'İ-CY, n. [It. polizza, a note; Sp. poliza.]

1. A ticket or warrant for money in the public funds.

2. A writing or instrument containing a contract of insurance; an instrument by which one party, in consideration of a premium, engages to indemnify another against a contingent loss, by making him a payment in compensation whenever the event shall happen by which the loss is to accrue. Burrill.

3. A pleasure-ground about a gentleman's estate: — alterations made in a town for the purpose of improving its appearance. [Scotland.] Jamieson.

Interest policy, a policy in which the insured has a real, substantial, assignable interest in the thing insured. — Open policy, a policy in which the amount of the interest insured is not fixed, but is left to be ascertained in case of loss. — Valued policy, a policy in which a value has been set on the goods insured, and inserted in the nature of liquidated damages, to save the necessity of proving it in case of loss. — Wager policy, a pretended insurance, founded on an ideal risk, where the insured has no risk in the thing insured. Bouvier.

† PÖL'İ-CY, v. a. To reduce to order, or to regulate by laws. Bacon.

PÖL'İ-CY-BOOK (-bäk), n. A book kept at an insurance-office for making entries of policies granted. Simmonds.

PÖL'İ-CY-HÖLD'ER, n. One who has a policy or contract of insurance. Simmonds.

PÖL'İNG, n. 1. The act of one who poles.

2. One of the boards used for supporting the earth during the formation of a tunnel. Francois.

3. (Gardening.) The act of dispersing worm-casts over walks with poles. Wright.

PÖL'İSH, v. a. [L. polio; It. polire, pulire; Sp. pulir; Fr. polir. — Dan. polere; Sw. pokera.] [İ. POLISHED; pp. POLISHING, POLISHED.]

1. To smooth or brighten, as by friction or attrition; to burnish; to furbish. Chaucer.

2. To refine; to civilize; to make elegant or polite. "Parts that polish life." Milton.

PÖL'İSH, v. n. To become smooth, bright, or glossy; to receive a gloss. Bacon.

PÖL'İSH, n. 1. Gloss or brightness produced by friction or attrition; lustre. Aldison.

2. Elegance of manners; refinement. This Roman polish and this smooth behavior. Addison.

PÖL'İSH, a. Relating to Poland, or to its inhabitants. Murray.

PÖL'İSH-Ä-BLE, a. Capable of being polished.

PÖL'İSHED (pöl'ish), p. a. 1. Made smooth and bright; rendered glossy.

2. Refined or elegant in manners; polite. Syn. — See ELEGANT, GENTEEL, POLITE.

PÖL'İSH-ED-NESS, n. The state of being polished. "Polishedness of manners." Cocentry.

PÖL'İSH-ER, n. He who, or that which, polishes.

PÖL'İSH-İNG, n. 1. The act of giving a polish.

2. Act of refining; refinement. To give her girls a single winter's polishing. Goldsmith.

Polishing slate, a light, slaty substance found in Bohemia. Brandt.

PÖL'İSH-İNG-BRÜSH, n. A hand-brush for polishing stoves, grates, &c. Simmonds.

PÖL'İSH-İNG-PÄSTE, n. 1. A kind of paste or blacking for harness and leather. Simmonds.

2. A substance compounded of oil, beeswax, and spirit varnish, for giving a polish to articles of household furniture. Simmonds.

PÖL'İSH-İNG-SLÄTE, n. A hone, slate, or whetstone. Simmonds.

PÖL'İSH-İNG-SNÄKE, n. A tool used by lithographers. Simmonds.

PÖL'İSH-İNG-TYN, n. A bookbinder's tool.

PÖL'İSH-MËNT, n. Polish. [R.] Waterhouse.

PÖL'İSH-PÖW'DER, n. A powder used for polishing articles of metal. Simmonds.

PQ-LÎTE', a. [L. politus; polio, politus, to polish; It. pulito; Sp. pulido; Fr. poli.]

1. † Polished; smooth; glossy. "The polite surface of any pellucid medium." Newton.

2. Polished in manners; courteous; genteel; refined; well-bred; accomplished; complaisant.

He marries, bows low, and grows polite. Pope.

Syn. — Polite (L. politus, polished) person or circle: polished society or manners; refined manners or taste; well-bred people; courteous (Fr. cour, court) behavior; genteel appearance; elegant style; civil language or treatment. Refinement is more than politeness, and relates as much to the mind as to the manners. Civility is less than politeness, courtesy, or urbanity. A man of civility may not be so courteous to his superiors as a man of politeness, nor so affable to his inferiors as a man of urbanity. — See GENTEEL.

† PQ-LÎTE', v. a. To make polite. Ray.

PQ-LÎTE'LY, ad. In a polite manner; genteelly.

PQ-LÎTE'NESS, n. Quality or state of being polite; polish or elegance of manners; refinement; gentility; courteousness; complaisance.

True politeness consists in being easy one's self, and in making every body about one as easy as one can. Pope.

Ceremonies are different in every country; but true politeness is every where the same. Goldsmith.

As charity covers a multitude of sins before God, so does politeness before men. Greville.

Syn. — See POLITE, GENTEEL.

PQ-LÎ-TËSSÉ', n. [Fr.] Politeness, — especially, over-acted politeness. Smart.

PQ-LÎ-TIC, a. [Gr. πολιτικός; polis, a city; L. politicus; It. & Sp. politico; Fr. politique.]

1. Civil; political. "Body politico." Hooker.

2. Wise; prudent; judicious; sagacious. "Politico, grave counsel." Shak.

3. Artful; cunning. "I have been politico with my friend, smooth with mine enemy." Shak.

Syn. — See POLITICAL.

† PQ-LÎ-TIC, n. A politician. Bacon.

PQ-LÎT'-ICAL, a. [See POLITIC.]

1. Pertaining to government, policy, polity, or politics. "Political wisdom." Rogers.

2. Pertaining to a nation or state; national; public; civil. "Political happiness." Milton. "The political state of Europe." Paley.

Political arithmetic, the art of making arithmetical calculations on the extent and value of lands, number of people, amount of taxes, &c., of a nation or commonwealth. — Political economy. See ECONOMY.

Syn. — Political partakes of the meaning of the nouns polity and politics, and politic of the noun policy. Political government; political or public measures; political (i. e. wise or prudent) conduct.

PQ-LÎT'-ICAL-ÏSM, n. Political zeal or partisanship. [R.] Ch. Ob.

PQ-LÎT'-ICAL-LY, ad. 1. With relation to government or politics. Mede.

2. † In a politic manner; artfully. Knolles.

PQ-LÎT'-CÂS'TER, n. A petty politician. "Law-jobbers and politicasters." [R.] L'Estrange.

PQ-LÎ-T'ICIAN (pôl-ē-tish'ān), n. [Fr. politicien.] 1. One versed in the science of government; a person skilled in, or devoted to, politics.

The man who can make two ears of corn, or two blades of grass, grow on the spot where only one grew before, would deserve better of mankind, and render more essential service to the country, than the whole race of politicians put together. Swift.

2. A man of artifice or deep contrivance. His success shall vouch him a politician. South.

† PQ-LÎ-T'ICIAN (pôl-ē-tish'ān), a. Politic; cunning; artful. Milton.

PQ-LÎ-TIC-LY, ad. In a politic manner; artfully.

PQ-LÎ-TICS, n. 1. The science or the art of government; or the administration of national or public affairs; that part of ethics which consists in the knowledge or the practice of conducting the various affairs of a state or nation; political science; political economy. Addison.

2. Political or public affairs, or the conduct and contentions of political parties.

Of crooked counsels and dark politics. Pope.

Syn. — See POLITICAL.

† PQ-LÎ-TIZE, v. n. To play the politician. Milton.

† PQ-LÎ-TÛRE, n. [L. politura.] Polish. Donne.

PQ-LÎ-TÛ, n. [Gr. πολίτης; L. politia.]

1. The form of government or civil constitution of a state or nation.

The polity of some of our neighbors hath not thought it expedient to have a king, and the improvement of the same. Locke.

2. Form of government; constitution. "Church government or church polity." Hooker.

3. † Policy; art; management. B. Jonson.

Syn. — See POLICY, POLITICAL.

PQ-L'KA, n. A dance of Polish origin. Pierce.

PQ-L'KA-JACK-ET, n. A jacket for females, knit by hand. Simmonds.

PQ-LL, n. [Dut. bol, a ball, a bulb; Ger. bolle.]

1. The head. "All flaxen was his poll." Shak.
